Halton gets cash to help kids

The Ontario government has forwarded $212,197 to Halton Region to help identify children at risk for future health problems or social troubles.

Halton MPP Ted Chudleigh said the investment will pay significant dividends down the road.

"I believe that this is money well spent," he remarked. "We invest a little now, and we can save substantially in the future as well as provide a better quality of life for our most vulnerable citizens."

The Healthy Babies, Healthy Children screening program is financed by the Province but administered by existing community agencies. The major portion of funding in the identification program is aimed at newborns.

Young children who are at risk of poor social, cognitive, communicative, health or psycho-social outcomes will be helped earlier to improve their immediate wellbeing and future prospects.

Please bring a food donation for the Santa Claus Parade drive this Sunday.
