interautomation designs and develops leading edge automated test systems for the major automotive companies. Our systems are used in research and development of the latest engines, transmissions and powertrains. Immediate opportunities exist in the application of our systems and in hardware and software development.

Application Engineers

You work with customers to specify and develop automated test systems integrating instrumentation, controls and test machinery with our UNIX-based test software. You are responsible for a complete solution from requirements definition to commissioning. An Electrical or Mechanical Engineering degree and a solid background in automated testing, instrumentation, electro-mechanical systems, and data acquisition and control systems are required. Experience in automotive dynamometer test applications is a real plus.

Equipment Engineers

You design and document electro-mechanical subsystems, design layouts and interconnections, and actively participate in the integration, testing, start-up and commissioning of equipment on-site. An Electrical or Mechanical Engineering degree and experience in the design and commissioning of large, complex data acquisition and control systems are required.

Software Developers

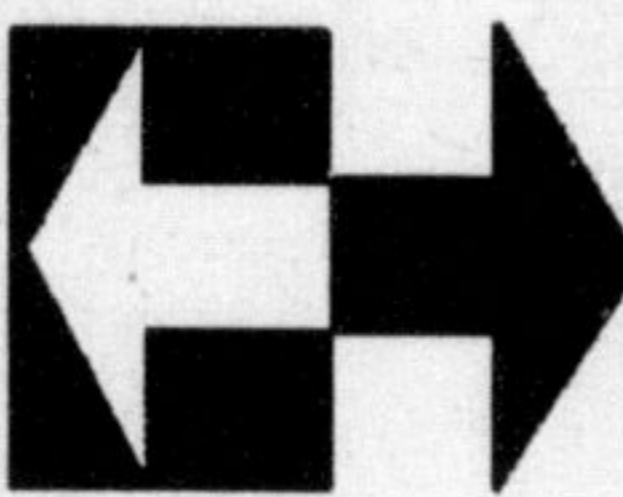

You are part of our software development team, designing and developing our software tools for test automation. These tools are UNIX-based and integrate real-time control and data acquisition with an X11 OSF/Motif GUI. An Engineering or Computer Science degree is required, with experience in the specification, design, development, testing and documentation of complex software systems.
