Politician offers much input at public meeting by police

By KAREN SMITH
The Champion

Miltonians want to see more police officers and better response times, a local councillor told police-hired consultants at a public meeting Wednesday.

Regional and town Councillor Rick Malboeuf told the meeting held to gain input on public opinion of Halton police that he hasn't heard any complaints about officers' professionalism or abilities, just that there aren't enough of them on the road.

"When you're doing a seat belt blitz there's five or six cars and people say, where are they when you need them?"

He said Milton has the least amount of officers in the region, yet the largest land mass and the most roadways.

He also complained that there's no Milton representation on the Halton Regional Police Services Board.

The Halton Regional Police Service is currently undergoing a review to determine multi-year policing resource requirements. It has hired the consulting firm Perivale and Taylor to conduct the review.

Attempting to determine how the Halton Regional Police Service can best meet the safety and security needs of the region, Keith Taylor of the firm said the issue is complex.

"There's no global answer on how to define effectiveness and efficiency," he said in his introduction, which was followed by questions posed to meeting participants.

Many questions centred around what citizens would expect in return for a tax increase.

Mr. Malboeuf said he couldn't use growth to justify an increase in the police budget.

Citizen Mary Chisholm said she believes Halton police officers generally have an exceptional rapport with the public, but warned that with a mega-jail and casino about to open, stepped-up police enforcement will be needed.

"We know there's going to be problems," she said.

Despite a newspaper advertisement and news coverage notifying the public of the Milton meeting, Ms Chisholm was the only private citizen to attend.

In addition to Ms Chisholm, the meeting consisted of two consultants, two police officers, a civilian police employee, a Champion reporter and Mr. Malboeuf, who offered his perception of concerns in Milton.
