SUNNY OASIS INTERNET SERVICES

What Does The Internet Really Mean To You??

Given some thought, can you answer this question with confidence? It doesn't matter if you own a business or perhaps manage one, or you're simply a person who presently owns a computer, or are considering purchasing one. The fact is you should start considering the Internet and all it's email, websites, e-commerce and over abundance of information as a valuable and effective tool for almost any function you carry out at the office or home everyday. From home you can bank, make a purchase, do comparison-shopping, communicate with friends and associates around the globe. The Internet is great to research for school, a hobby, a vacation or travel arrangements, home renovations and repairs, the list is endless!

At the office, the Internet has already proven itself as a winner for exchange of information through email, file/data transfer, conference calls, increased exposure globally, higher productivity, time management, employment opportunities and of course increased revenues!

Whether you understand computers and all the terminology or you feel it may simply be too much information for you to handle all at once, you're definitely not alone. But make no mistake, the Internet and all it's technology are here to stay and already changing the way we live at home and at work. There's no better time to get up to speed than the present. As of July of this year, there are over 200 million people on the Internet and that number will double by 2001.

The New Age of Commerce for Business

The world of commerce today looks different thanks to the Internet. The growth of the internet in recent years has triggered a transformation in the way people and businesses communicate and interact, from regional and national businesses, to companies that can service the world. The Internet's popularity has prompted many businesses to establish a presence on the World Wide Web. A wealth of information - from product and service catalogues, to press releases and company contacts - is now available to anyone who seeks this information. It all rests at the tips of our fingers. Some companies have taken this a step further and use the Internet to sell their wares directly. As a result, consumers and businesses can now conduct on-line transactions easily, quickly, and painlessly - electronic commerce is predicted to flourish!

Next on the Net

On-line sales growth is expected to double each year for the next five years. Predictions are that the Internet will be the backbone of the economy in the next century. New developments will continue to surface. Instead of receiving bills in the traditional way - paper-based and through the mail - in the next 3 months you'll be able to access most of your bills electronically under one cyber roof. You will have an electronic post box where you would receive utility bills, government forms and mailings, and even personal letters on one secure site. We already utilize on-line banking, credit card or the equivalent of EFT (Electronic Funds Transfer).

The advancement of high-speed data lines, fibre optics, modems and computers, real time video, as well as audio communications and conferencing, is changing the face of business as we have known it.

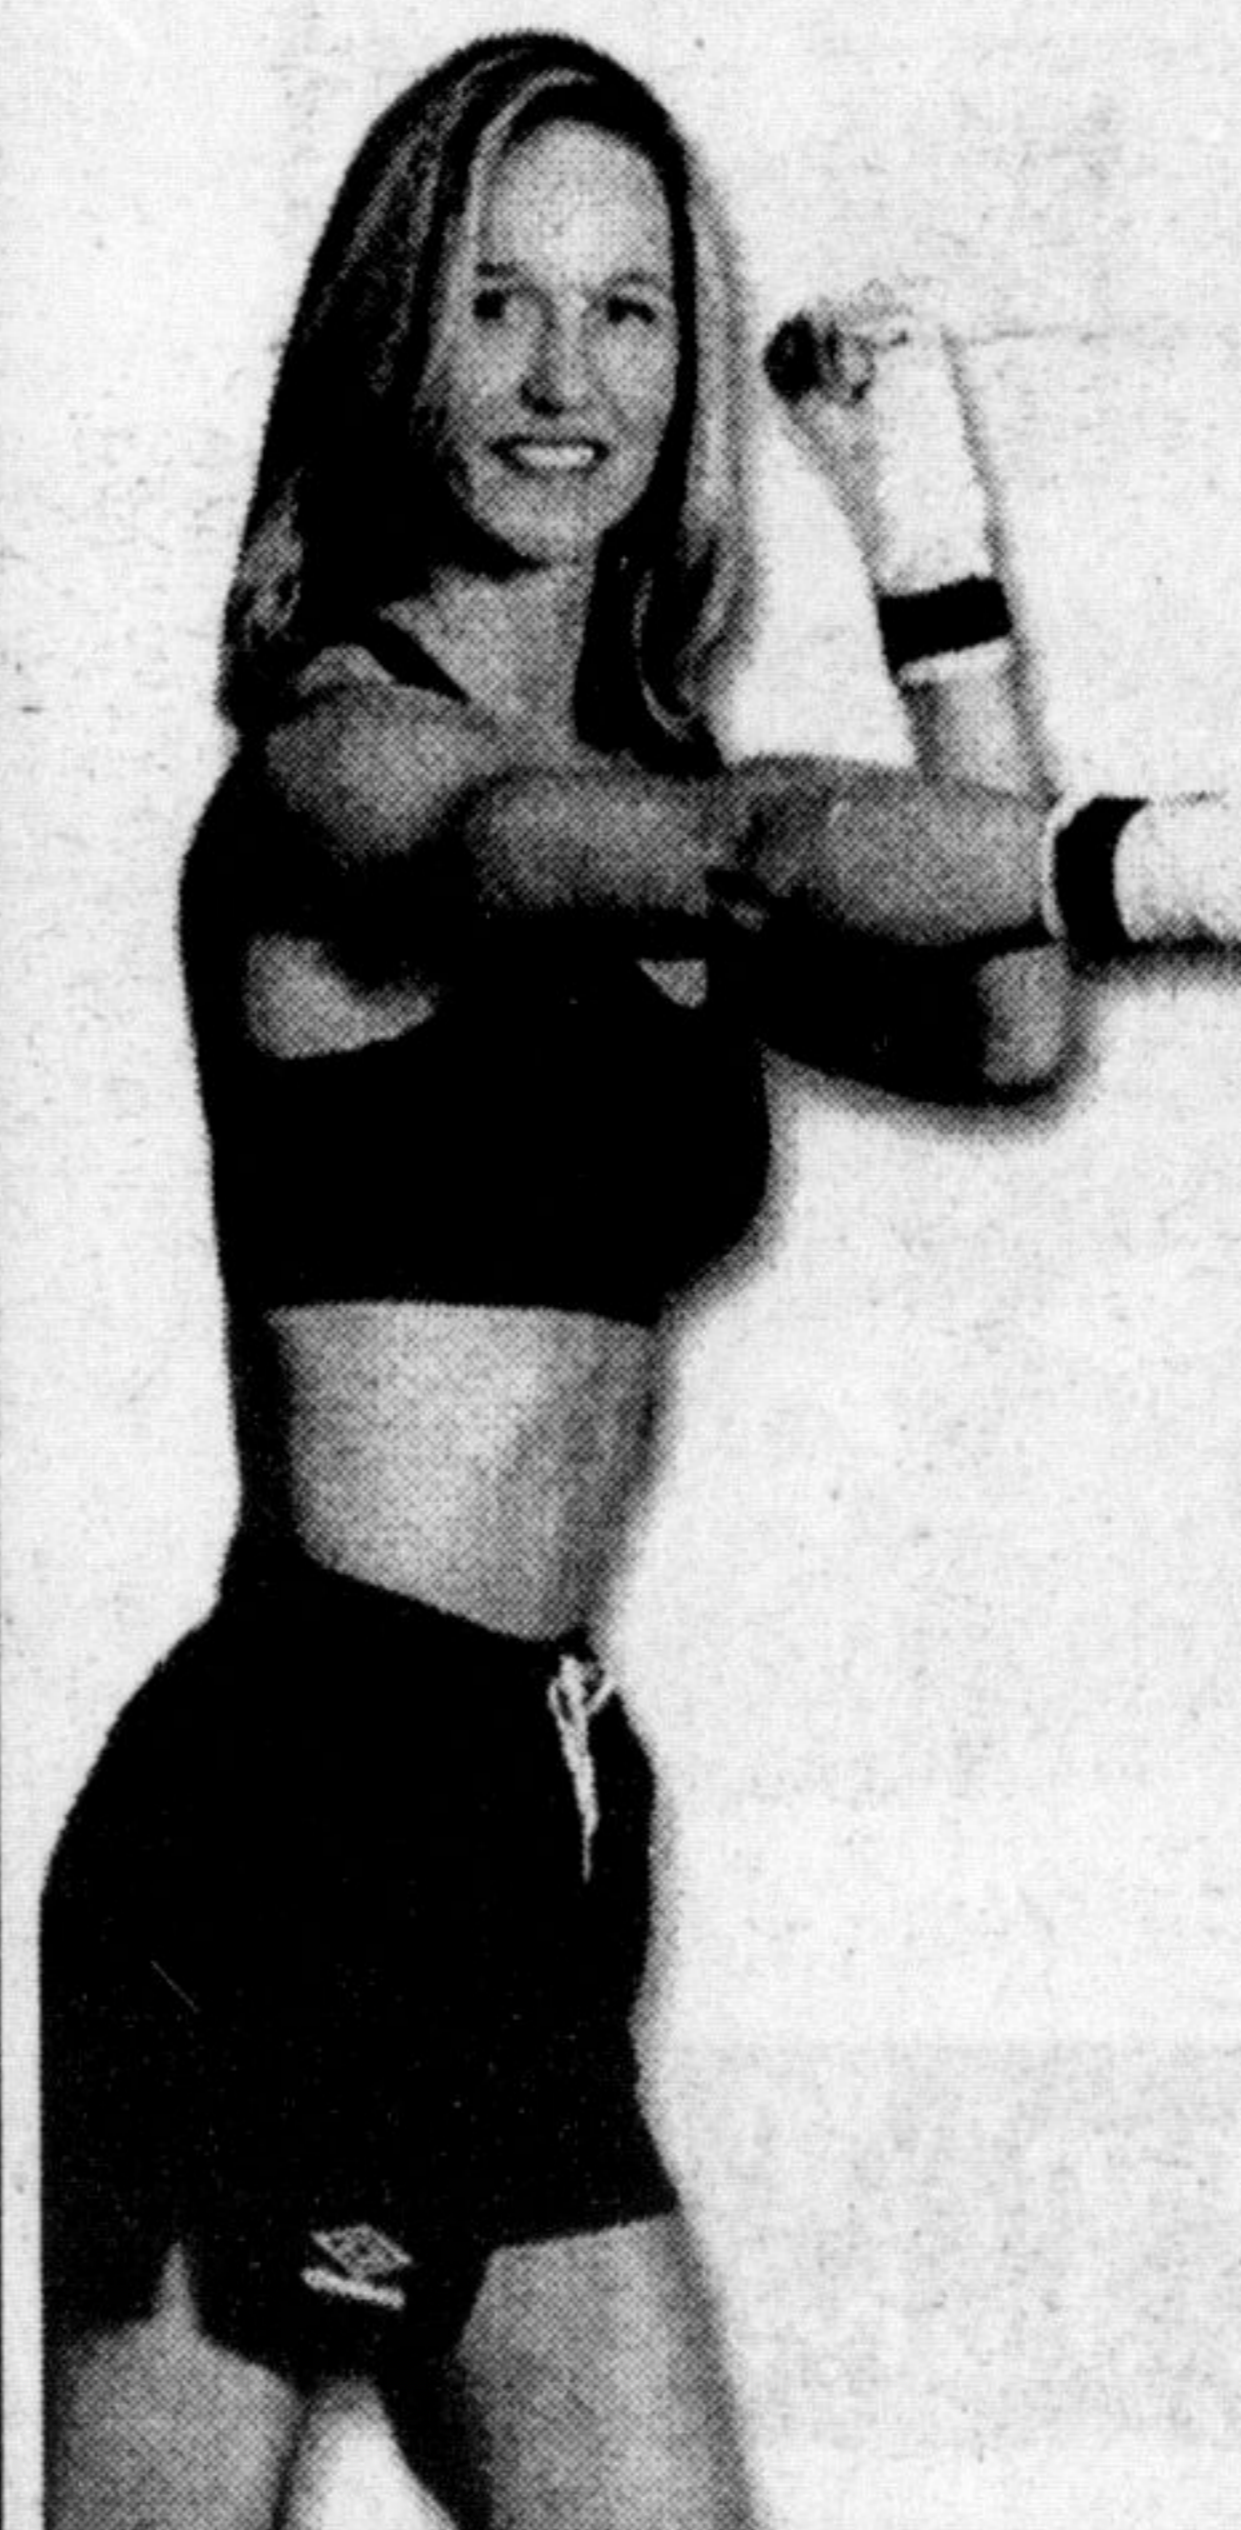

Remember when companies used to ask, "Should we do business on the Internet?" Today, the question is more likely to be, "How fast can we get going and how can we make it work better to serve our customers and suppliers?" Chances are that your competition is already there - where are you?
