Romance may make it out to fundraising art show Friday

Her famous watercolour paintings are drenched with the carefree warmth of hearth, home and enduring family love.

But since being diagnosed with a benign, inoperable brain tumour in 1994, the private life of celebrated artist Trisha Romance has also been steeped in pain.

But if health permits, Ms Romance will travel from her Niagara-on-the-Lake home to the Harrop Gallery Friday to personally kick off a fundraiser for the Epilepsy Research Fund.

Today, Ms Romance suffers seizures that can take a full day to recover from. But she's fighting back by showing every print she has released in the past 20 years in an effort to raise more than $10,000 for epilepsy research.

The private collection will then become a public exhibit, beginning Saturday and running until December 7.

A $75 ticket will buy admission to the fundraiser, which will showcase the sale and auction of 118 limited-edition prints by Ms Romance. Cocktails and refreshments will be served, and space is limited to 200 guests.

The Bridge Home, a transition house in Hillsburgh for young women with disabilities, will also benefit from the public portion of the exhibit.

Visitors will be asked to pay a $5 admission charge to raise funds for the home. The public exhibit will give Ms Romance' fans a chance to view a rare double-decade retrospective of her work.

And while Ms Romance and her work will be in the spotlight for the showcase event, the gallery itself plays the leading role in two paintings, The Harrop Homestead and Winter Twilight.

It became familiar to Ms

Romance and her husband/manager Gary Peterson during the years the couple rented a farmhouse in town.

"It has such charm and magic but you feel like you're coming home," Ms Romance has said of the gallery.
