Preparing for space walk took almost four hours: astronaut

Preparing for the space walk itself took close to four hours, so Col. Hadfield had to contain his excitement.

"You have to get dressed, which takes a while. I had to guard my emotions in case something happened to delay the walk. When the hatch opened, that's when I knew it was a go-ahead."

Col. Hadfield compared stepping out of the shuttle and into orbit as "coming out of the womb to be born."

"It was incredible, the brightness of the earth," he recalled. "Africa goes by in the blink of an eye. It was stunningly visual in content. It was so entrancing to see the world through my visor. Looking at the earth through the shuttle windows wasn't the same. It would be like looking through the bathroom window at the outdoors; it's so different when you're actually outside."

Col. Hadfield only allowed himself a few moments to "soak in the view" before he had to get down to business.

Because of computer problems, the testing of the newly-installed Canadarm2 was delayed, forcing the astronauts to spend an extra day in space.

"I helped repair a few things around the station," Col. Hadfield said. "I installed an oxygen line and fixed a urinal."

The shuttle Endeavour landed May 1 at Edwards Air Force Base in southern California due to stormy weather at the Kennedy Space Centre in Cape Canaveral, Florida.

Soon after landing back on Earth, Col. Hadfield received a phone call from Prime Minister Jean Chretien congratulating the astronaut on his accomplishments.

"I'm looking forward to coming back home to Canada — it was Canada's flight," Col. Hadfield said. "I know what (the flight) meant to me and my family, but I want to know how Canadians feel. I haven't talked to many Canadians since landing."

So has it now sunk in that he bears the title of the first Canadian to walk in space?

"I guess so. It was the first time I've walked (in space) and that's almost secondary to being the first Canadian to do it. The fact that I'm the first Canadian (to walk in space) is really a Canadian thing. I need to be told by Canadians what it means."

After a Canadian coast-to-coast speaking tour and a well-deserved vacation with his wife and three children, Col. Hadfield will likely work as the director of operations for NASA in Russia in the fall.

"The space walk was the most amazing and thrilling thing I've done in my life," Col. Hadfield said. "I'm looking forward to coming back to Milton, although I don't know yet when I will be. I'm looking forward to meeting the people and sharing my experience."

The 17-metre, 1641 kg Canadarm2 will propel itself around the station structure like an inchworm, performing construction tasks beyond the reach of the smaller original Canadarm on the space shuttles.
