On May 22nd, Haifa, Israel will be the focus of world-wide attention as thousands of people from around the globe gather at the foot of Mount Carmel. They will celebrate the opening of a series of majestic garden terraces that have transformed the face of this mountain in a land sacred throughout history to Jews, Christians, Muslims and Baha'is. For all who believe that mankind is one (regardless of race) and that all religions invoke the same God (regardless of name), these terraces symbolize the many paths to God.

The kilometre-long terrace gardens surround the Canadian-designed, gold-domed Shrine - the second most sacred spot in the world for Baha'is. They cascade from the top to the bottom of the mountain, and employ a variety of flowing fountains and flowering and environmentally appropriate plants, as well as inspiring ornamentation to create a stunning effect. The terraces are connected to a series of classically designed buildings that constitute the world-wide spiritual and administrative heart of the international Baha'i community. Through the efforts of Baha'is everywhere, this historic mountain has been transformed into a paradise of formal and natural gardens, inviting walkways and paths, and fountains and pools - a metaphor of the Baha'i teaching of unity in diversity.

The opening ceremonies on May 22 will involve a cross-section of world citizens, including Baha'is from virtually every country of the globe - many from less developed nations. For a significant number, it will be their first time away from home, their first time outside their region or country, their first time in an airplane or ship, and their first visit to the centre of their world-embracing Faith.

The ceremonies begin at dusk and feature an original oratorio and symphony by award-winning composers from Norway and Tajikistan performed by artists from Austria, Canada, Israel, Romania, and the U.S.A. The orchestral music will climax with the spectacular inaugural lighting of the Terraces, building light upon light like strings of pearls draped around the illuminated Shrine.

On the morning of the next day, indigenous musicians will perform and thousands of celebrants, many in national dress, will walk up the terraces for the first time. Following the week's festivities, visitors and tourists from everywhere will be able to enjoy the gardens - open to all, every day, free of charge.

Vision TV will broadcast highlights of this landmark event in two one-hour programs on Tuesday May 22 and Wednesday May 23 at 9 pm. Both programs will be repeated again the following day at 1:00pm. Live satellite transmissions will also occur several hours earlier via Telstar 6. A photo gallery is on the Web at: www.bahaiworldnews.org/terraces.
