Sam Sherratt School gets funding from Grassroots for information technology

Students are learning about information technology with help from the Grassroots project.

Eight Halton public schools will receive a total of nearly $45,000 for participating in the project.

"Grassroots is a terrific opportunity for schools to connect curriculum and technology in the classroom," said Mary Taylor, the Halton District School Board's instructional technologies coordinator.

"With these new funds, schools have been able to enhance the computer technology they already have in their schools."

Locally, Sam Sherratt School will receive funding for its 'Celebrating Our Success' program.

With the funds, participating schools can purchase technology to assist their projects and participate in staff development sessions to learn how to use technology in the classroom.

Schools can invest the funds for computers, scanners, digital cameras and software that benefit the entire school.

Grassroots funding is for school projects that engage students in using information technology for learning.

Participating schools submitted proposals that use technology and are linked to the Ontario curriculum.

As part of the project, each school will produce a web site that will be a resource to other schools and serve as an integral part of the school project.

The Grassroots project is a national initiative sponsored by the Ministry of Education, Industry Canada, SchoolNet, the Education Network of Ontario and the Ontario Public Supervisory Officials Association.
