Papke's salary is average: trustee

director would likely cost the Halton board at least $50,000.

Ms Gardiner confirmed Mr. Papke never tried to use any potential job offers as leverage in his negotiations.

"The director's salary is arrived at by looking at the average salary of the (public board) directors in the GTA (York, Peel, Durham and Toronto), most of whom have one or two associate directors. His salary is actually last year's (GTA) average," she said.

"We're not leaders (in setting pay scales). These salaries are what is being demanded," said Ms Gardiner, who acknowledged she wasn't aware of the percentage increases in Mr. Papke's contract.

"There is an associate director (in Peel) making more than our director," she said.

However, figures obtained from the director's executive assistant with the Peel District School Board show that its two associate directors have current base salary ranges of $127,500-$144,000.

The much larger Peel public board serves Mississauga, Brampton and Caledon and has a 2002-03 budget of $819 million. Halton's proposed budget for 2002-03 is $285.5 million.

Peel's outgoing eight-year director, Harold Brathwaite, had a final salary of $162,717; his successor, Jim Grieve, a long-time director for the Ottawa-Carleton board, will get a base salary of $185,000.

The neighbouring Dufferin-Peel Catholic board, which had a budget of $567 million for 2001-02, pays its long-time director Michael Bator $151,530. Two associate directors get $128,138 each.

The Hamilton-Wentworth District School Board, with a current-year budget of $364.7 million, paid its director, Marv Matier, $136,538 in base salary this year. The board has no associate directors.

At the Halton Catholic District School Board, Mr. Papke's counterpart, first-year director Lou Piovesan, is on a three-year grid that starts at $134,025 and currently tops out at $142,580. The Catholic board, which has a $148.8-million proposed budget for 2002-03, hasn't yet approved any employee salary increases, said business superintendent Joe Birett.
