New school now being built

Milton's newest elementary school is under construction.

The yet-to-be named school will be located at 1114 Woodward Ave., in the eastern development area.

The ground-breaking was held last Tuesday.

"This is going to be great for Milton," Halton District School Board Education Director Dusty Papke said at the ceremony.

"This is one of the most exciting things we get to do — open new schools and start construction of new schools."

The precise catchment area is currently undecided as the school board is considering changes to a number of catchment areas in Milton for the next school year.

The two-story school is expected to be operational by next September and will have a 650-student capacity.

In addition to 17 classrooms and three kindergarten rooms, the school will house a double gym, science room, computer room, art facility and more.

"We've been working with the boards of education, planning and pre-planning Milton for a number of years. It's really great to see the lot of us, including the school board, being proactive instead of reactive," Mayor Gord Krantz said, adding no new schools have been built in Milton for more than 20 years.

"We've certainly come a long, long way in providing facilities for these young people."

A contest will be held later in the school year to seek school name suggestions from students. From the suggestions, school board staff will present a short-list of names for the board of directors to choose from.
