

Resident's caller ID system helps police respond to incident

Police were able to respond quickly to a domestic situation thanks to a resident's caller ID system.

On Sunday at about 4:30 p.m., a Milton resident received a disturbing message on her answering machine. All that could be heard was screaming and sounds of a struggle.

The resident had caller ID, and called police with the telephone number and name of the person — who was unknown to her — who had left the message. After further checks, police obtained the caller's Milton address and, upon arrival, found a domestic dispute.

Arrested in connection with the assault was a 45-year-old Milton man. He was taken to Oakville-Trafalgar Memorial Hospital for treatment for an unrelated medical condition.

The victim wasn't injured.

Halton Regional Police spokesperson Sgt. Val Hay said police don't know what made the caller phone that specific number. The caller may have dialed the wrong number, she said, adding that the case wasn't unique. "It's not unusual that (victims) won't call police for various reasons."
