

Royal Bank donates $5,000 to Junior Achievement

Thanks to a donation from RBC Royal Bank, more students will be able to have a Junior Achievement experience.

On April 23, RBC Royal Bank donated $5,000 to Junior Achievement of Halton in support of its business and life skills programs.

"This donation from RBC Royal Bank will ensure that more students across Halton Region will have the JA experience," said Sue Suess, president of Junior Achievement of Halton.

"Our programs give students insight into the role of business and entrepreneurship in the community and encourage them to think about the crucial link between education and their future success. None of this would be possible without support from the business community, such as this very generous cheque from RBC Royal Bank."

Garry Bader, sales and market manager for Halton area RBC Royal Bank, said Junior Achievement is one of RBC's key community partners.

"RBC understands the incredible impact of Junior Achievement, in helping young people better understand business skills, leadership skills, the meaning of success and the connection between experience and reaching one's personal goals," Mr. Bader said.

Junior Achievement of Halton is a non-profit organization dedicated to providing a bridge between educators, businesses, parents and the community to teach young people the skills needed to succeed in a challenging world.

Programs are funded by sponsors and donations from businesses and the community, and are provided free to schools.
