New town council officially sworn in

By JASON MISNER

The Champion

Mayor Gord Krantz pledged to work for the 40,000 plus residents of Milton over the next three-year term of office, saying it will be one defined by balancing expensive capital projects with acceptable tax levels.

In his inaugural speech Monday night, Mr. Krantz - who has assumed the town's top political post since 1980, representing one of the longest reigns in Ontario - said a potential new library and arts and cultural centre, Town Hall expansion, traffic congestion and transit needs will dominate this upcoming council and likely beyond.

"Some of these have very heavy capital costs and heavy operating costs and all of those things have to be weighed and measured," the 66-year-old told the well-dressed crowd, comprised of smiling families and friends who packed Council Chambers to support their respective councillor.

"I promise to run this municipality like I have in the past - like a business."

The capital projects Mr. Krantz mentioned in his speech won't be the easiest of items to prioritize.

A new arts and cultural centre, a library and Town Hall expansion combined are estimated to cost in excess of $40 million.

There isn't a typical bus service in Milton and the cost to purchase a single bus runs around $100,000, not to mention hiring drivers and the need for maintenance of the buses.

In the lead up to last month's election, residents peppered candidates with questions about introducing a form of adequate transit to town.

Deliberations for the 2004 budget will take place December 16 and 17.

Milton's new council was officially sworn in during an hour-long ceremony dripping with pomp and circumstance.

The 11-person council, complete with four new faces, were led into and out of Council Chambers by a bag piper.

After singing O' Canada, the politicians took a declaration of the oath to office before Justice of the Peace Louise Scisizzi.

They also had a chance to speak for a few minutes. Some expressed the assurance that this new council - with the right combination of new blood and experience - has the ability to lead the rapidly-growing Milton through what could be one of the more influential times it has seen.

In accepting the chain of office for a ninth consecutive time, Mr. Krantz also talked about the positive benefits of the Hwy. 401 corridor being serviced with sewer and water pipes. It will allow for industries to set up shop, helping create all-important jobs and providing the payment of much-welcomed industrial property taxes.

He also alluded to the potential construction of the Eco-Tech Village, a leading-edge environmentally-sustainable subdivision.

And, Mr. Krantz spoke of how taxpayers want quality services, noting snow plows were out clearing streets Monday during a wintry blast.

The 2003-06 town council is: Ward 1 Councillors Rick Day and Brian Penman; Ward 2 Councillors Mike Boughton and Mark Curtis; Ward 3 Councillors Cindy
