Police issue warning about VoIP

Halton Regional Police have an important message for those who subscribe to home computer Voice over Internet Protocol.

The telephone service doesn't automatically connect callers to local 911 emergency service, as was discovered recently when a Halton resident experiencing chest pains called 911 on his new VoIP Internet connection.

He was connected to the Toronto Police 911 Centre, and only a 416-phone number displayed. Luckily he was able to provide his address in Halton and an ambulance was dispatched to his home.

Transported to Oakville-

Trafalgar Memorial Hospital, the man underwent tests and has since been released.

Halton residents currently subscribing to VoIP services are being urged to contact their subscriber to determine if there are any limitations in the 911 system associated to the company.
