

Decision set for May 19

prejudice, contrary to what Mr. Olah said. Court heard there were numerous times last minute evidence was produced that might have changed the direction of the defense if it had been produced sooner.

He added there was an incident when the prosecution's telling of what happened changed after the defence had already chosen its course of action.

"We cast the die with the position we were going to take in our defense and the rug was pulled from under us," Mr. Crocker told court, referring to this as the prosecution's "tactical advantage."

Frustration has been a key characteristic of this case, court heard.

"It's frustrating to try our best to defend our client when the prosecution proceeds as it has."

Mr. Crocker told court a mistrial would-n't be fair to Mr. Vastis.

"Mr. Vastis has spent a lot of money to retain us. To start again would be a gross injustice," court heard.

The justice of the peace will announce his decision May 17 in Burlington.
