Lack of timely hits continue to plague seniors

High stranded runner count costly at Tillsonburg Tournament

By STEVE LeBLANC
The Champion

For the most part, the Senior Red Sox haven't had much problem getting men on base. As for cashing them in, well that's a different story.

Milton has stranded an average of nine runners on base per game this spring — a troubling figure, especially given how narrow the line separating victory and defeat can be at this level.

The Red Sox' lack of offensive finish continued last weekend at the Tillsonburg

Tournament, where they managed a 1-2 record and were ousted by league rival Burlington in the consolation semis Sunday.

The 4-2 defeat was primarily the result of leaving a dozen runners aboard, although four stolen bases against Milton certainly didn't help.

"We had some big chances to win it, but you can't strand 12 guys against a team like Burlington and expect to win," said manager George Moore. "We're still not getting timely hits."

Steve MacDonald came within a few feet of winning the game with a would-be three-run homer that fell just short, while first-year pitcher Liam Tennant delivered a rock-solid six-and-two-thirds-inning performance.

Outfielder Nick Aalbers came through with his third straight two-hit effort versus Burlington.

Even in victory the Red Sox left far too many runners aboard for anyone's liking. Saturday's 6-1 decision over Creemore — highlighted by Adam Ahearn's strong pitching — saw Milton strand 14 on base. Aalbers, Reese Davies and mainstay Matt McCandless led the offensive charge with two hits apiece.

Last Friday night the Red Sox kicked off tournament play with a heartbreaking 2-1 loss to Niagara Falls.

Traffic tie-ups en route to Tillsonburg meant a number of players got to the game late, leaving Milton with some key holes through the early going.

Facing a slow left-handed hurler who kept them off balance, the Red Sox really never got going at the plate and had to rely on some credible mound work by Adam Finkbeiner to keep things close.

Davies homered in the seventh to cut the lead in half and had two hits in the tournament opener, as did Aalbers.

Milton suffered another loss last week in the form of an injury to workhorse pitcher Ian Zettle, who hurt his ankle at work June 2. He joins fellow hurler Brent Kostal on the disabled list, leaving the local seniors a little lean in their rotation.

The Red Sox resume league play tonight in Dundas and host Oakville tomorrow at Brian Best Park. Game time, as always, is 1:30 p.m.

Milton currently sits at 6-3 and as of last night was tied with Etobicoke for second place in COBA's Andrews Division.
