Accessibility bill welcome news, says committee

By MELANIE HENNESSEY
The Champion

A new Provincial bill designed to make Ontario fully accessible for the disabled has come as welcome news to the Town's accessibility advisory committee.

The legislation, called the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act, received royal assent Monday, making it a valid law.

"It's certainly a step in the right direction," said Janet Davidson, Town community programs co-ordinator and staff representative on the Milton accessibility advisory committee (MAAC).

Ms Davidson noted the bill's goal is to create universal accessibility by 2025 — an objective the MAAC is also looking to adopt and a timeline that she said is reasonable.

Under the act, the public and private sectors will have to meet certain standards created at the provincial level on things like facility accessibility in five-year stages, leading up to 2025.

Examples of new standards include having accessible transit, lower counter heights at cash registers to accommodate wheelchairs and accessible pedestrian routes and entrances to buildings.

Ms Davidson emphasized that the act and its standards are important because "It's the right of every individual to be able to go where they want, when they want."

While the bill comes as good news, Ms Davidson pointed out that there's no timeline for when the new standards will be "downloaded," meaning the Town could be receiving the standards it has to meet by 2010 in 2008.

She also noted that no provincial funding has been identified to help implement the measures in the act. "There are some issues, but it's a work in progress."

The bill passing through the legislature and receiving royal assent comes after a decade-long campaign by Ontarians with disabilities pushing for this type of act.

"We now look forward to rolling up our sleeves to work together with the Ontario government, the business community and the broader public sector to get this new legislation effectively implemented," said David Lepofsky, chair of the Ontarians with Disabilities Act committee.
