

Region holds well water information sessions

It's that time of the year again — time to make sure your well water is safe.

Once again, the Halton Region Health Department is holding three well water information sessions for residents who use private wells.

In Campbellville, a session will take place October 27 at the Lions Hall, 42 Main St. N.

Two other sessions will take place this month, one today at Conservation Halton's head office, 2596 Britannia Rd. W., in Burlington, and the other October 20 at Stewarttown Public School, 13068 No. 15 Sideroad, in Georgetown.

Residents can drop by any of the sessions between 3 and 9 p.m.

"At Halton Region, safe drinking water for our residents is a priority," said Regional Chairman Joyce Savoline. "Hosting well water information sessions allows us the opportunity to educate residents about the importance of maintaining a safe well water supply."

Residents attending the information sessions will have the opportunity to:

- Talk to public health inspectors about well water quality concerns
- Drop off private well water samples in proper sampling bottles supplied by the health department, which will be sent to the public health lab for bacteriological testing
- Receive sampling bottles for future testing
- Have water tested for nitrate — bring one cup of water in a sterilized jar
- Learn about water treatment systems that can correct water problems from local companies
- Talk to professional well drillers from the Ontario Ground Water Association
- Talk to staff from Halton Region's Planning and Public Works department to discuss water conservation principles
- Review well water records from the Region's well record database
- Become familiar with the Public Health Laboratory's phone-in system to receive water sample results.

The Region offers these sessions twice yearly.

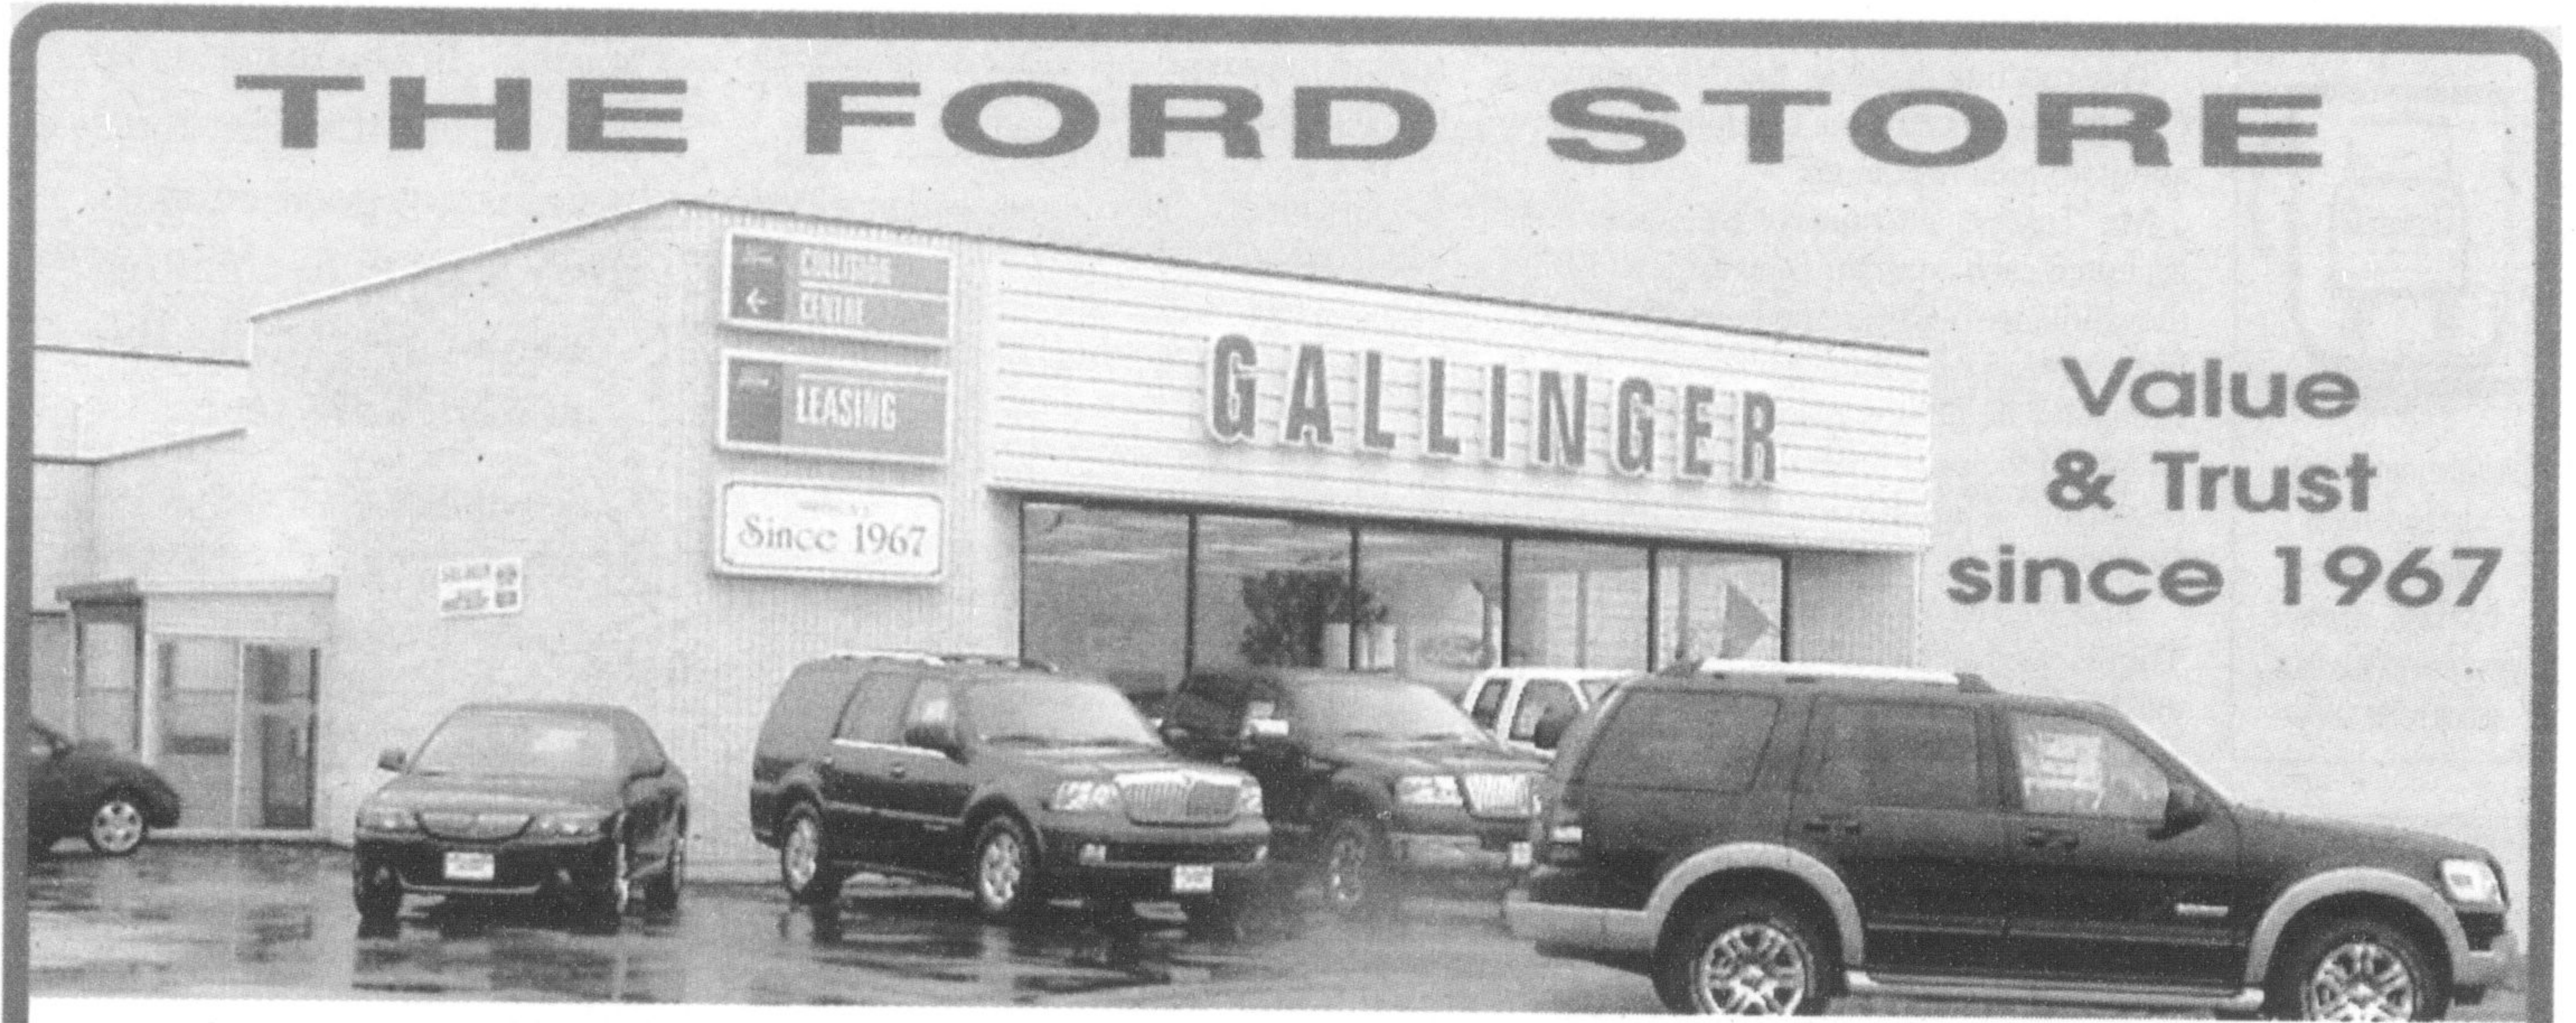

"In order to maintain a safe well water supply, it is crucial for residents to maintain and repair their wells and submit water samples at least three times a year to the health department for bacteria testing," said Dr. Bob Nosal, Halton's medical officer of health.
