Proposal for small number of offenders: Challinor

• from COUNCILLORS on page A5
be discouraged from planting them in the first place, "because one day that little tree could grow into a heritage tree," he said.

He added although he's not a "tree hugger," he also wouldn't cut down a tree unless it was necessary. The situation could get out of hand, with "tree huggers" preventing even trimming trees, he cautioned.

Ward 3 Councillor Jan Mowbray said she was opposed to each of the options, but if forced to choose, preferred protecting trees under the Ontario Heritage Act.

"I'm opposed to a bylaw that says people don't have enough sense to determine what should (and shouldn't) be cut," she said.

Ward 4 Councillor Wendy Schau said she'd support the recommendation because it wasn't committing council to anything beyond including trees in the 2008 Character Study.

"I support it because it leaves things open," she said.

Ward 4 Councillor John Challinor, who wasn't present at the meeting, said he's pleased with the "integrated fashion" with which trees could be protected in the Character Area Plan recommendation.

"Obviously I want this to happen as quick as possible, but we need it to happen in a thoughtful way," Mr. Challinor said.

The vast majority of Milton residents take care of any historic features on their properties, including trees, he said. The proposed bylaw is for "the one per cent" who don't, he said.
