Help needed for retirement: Turner

• from RURAL on page A3
people pour their money into paying down their mortgage, so that in the end they have a big house but no money set aside.

"The government is going to have to help people plan for their retirement 10 years from now. Now, 70-year-olds are looking to the government to help them out."

He's also looking into proposing a lifetime savings plan that socks away after tax dollars for retirement years while letting Canadians earn capital gains tax free. So, when they need to draw on that they money, they won't be hit with another again.

Over the next week Turner is polling opinion on whether or not residents:

- Support income splitting between working spouses with children to care for, or between retired couples living on a single income

- Want to deduct their property taxes from their income, and then repay the deductions

when they sell their home

- Mortgage interest deductibility or the reinstatement of capital tax on real estate

- RRSPs for stay at home caregivers

- Further cuts to the GST
- Reductions in personal income tax

The end result of these solicited opinions on tax reform could push Tax Freedom Day in Canada (reported yearly by public policy think tank, the Fraser Institute) ahead on the calendar.
