

Park needs donations

• from COUNTRY on page A3

"The commercial parking of Toronto Auto Auctions' cars does not offend him (Newell) and he would not be opposed to the parking being legalized," the decision reads.

The park had actually been storing Toronto Auto Auctions' vehicles since 1999 between December 1 and May 1 on about 11 acres of its property, but it came to the NEC's attention last year after a public complaint was made.

CHP then had to apply to the NEC for a development permit to allow the vehicle storage. But, the permit was denied in a close 6-5 vote, resulting in the appeal to the hearing office.

The appeal decision comes on the heels of some good news for Country Heritage Park. At the end of last month, the park's purchase by Country Heritage Experience Inc. from the Province was finalized, after almost six years of negotiations.

An endowment fund of $2 million is now being developed to provide a source of stable funding to help with the park's future development.

Cressman recently kicked off the fundraising campaign for the endowment by announcing a $98,210.71 donation from CanPlov '03 — a plowing championship event the park hosted in 2003. He also encouraged local residents and businesses to make a contribution to the fund to help the park make up its lost revenue.

Toronto Auto Auctions is now looking to add 2,185 parking spaces to its Lawson Road operation for vehicle storage.

The Town would have to approve a zoning bylaw amendment to allow the storage on a gravel-based parking area at a 25-acre property adjacent to the auction's business.
