

POSSE gets grant for magazine

Money has been dealt out to a local youth program for a new magazine and transportation service.

Peer Outreach Support Services and Education (POSSE) recently received a one-time grant from Health Canada for $99,000.

POSSE is a free service for youths between the ages of 15 and 24 who live in north Halton.

It provides training, street level outreach, information and support to encourage safer decision making to reduce the risks associated with drugs, sex, homelessness, violence and discrimination.

The transportation service — entitled 'Need a Lift?' — is for youths who need rides to the food bank or for medical or social service appointments. Rides are booked in advance and are given on a first-come, first-served basis. Small fees may apply.

The magazine will give local youth a chance to voice their experiences and opinions and educate youth about drugs.

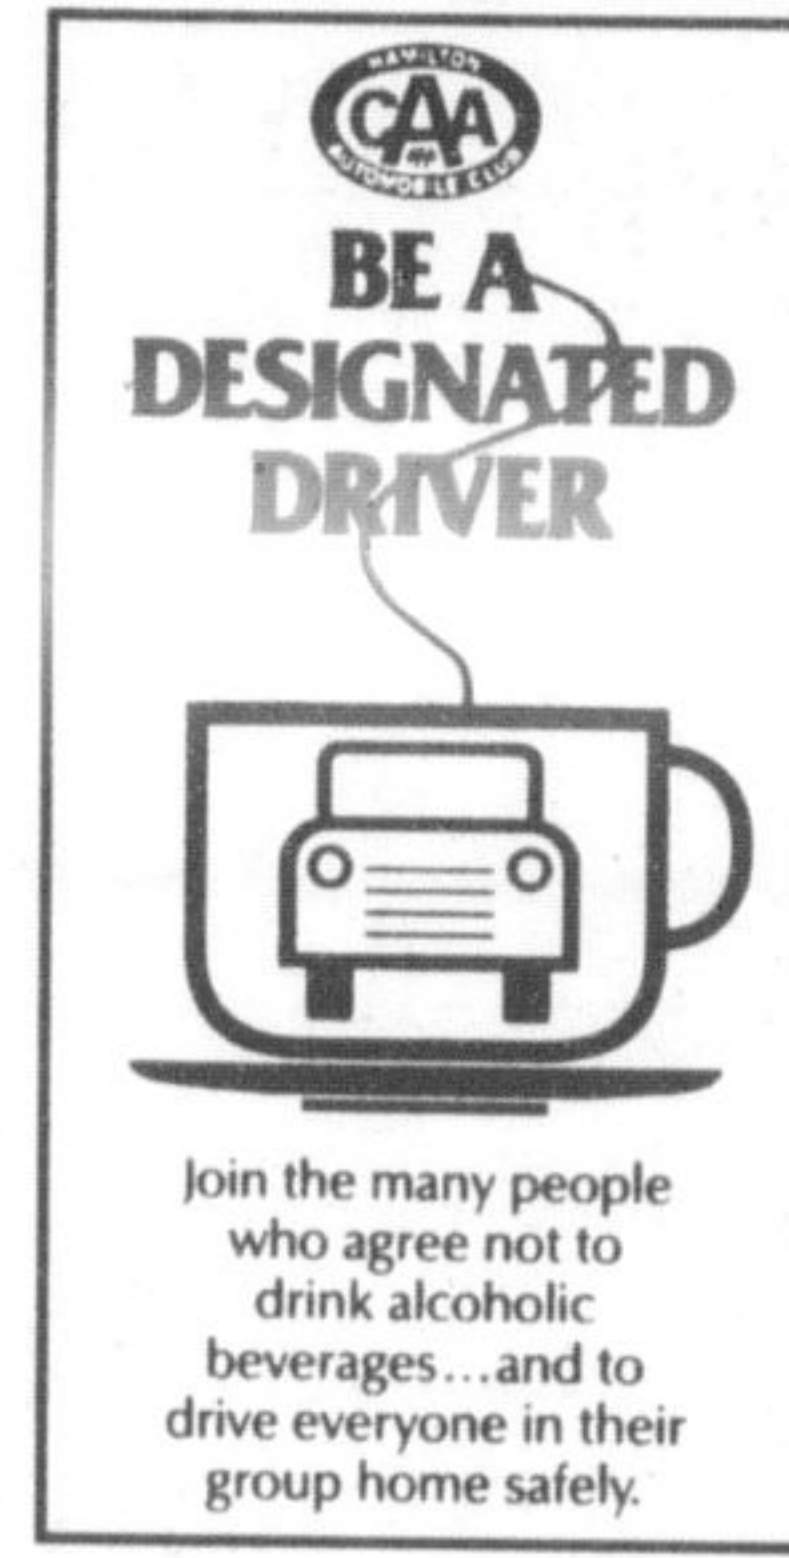

It'll also feature human rights issues concerning youth such as homophobia, racism, sexism and ageism. Contributors will be paid for their submissions, and there'll be an editorial committee of six paid youths.

Submissions will be published anonymously for confidentiality.

Articles, poetry and drawings should include a name and return address and can be mailed to: The Undercroft Magazine, c/o POSSE, 47 Mill St. E., Acton, L7J 1H1. Or they can be e-mailed to posseproject@aztec-net.com.

For more information on either of the projects, call Kimm Kent or Domenic Padula at (519) 853-5908.

Drury Food School students shine

The way to the judges' hearts was definitely through their stomachs.

Nicole Leslie and Kurt Almey, both students at E.C. Drury's Food School, did very well at the recent Skills Olympics, a competition for hands-on skills ranging from construction to cooking.

Leslie, 18, and Almey, 17, participated in the regional skills competition in Burlington in April, and took a gold in baking and gold in culinary arts respectively.

Last month, the students competed in the provincials in Kitchener and Leslie won bronze in the baking category.

"We're so proud of them," said Shirley Dusmet, a teacher at E.C. Drury's Food School.

For the competition, Leslie had to make a loaf of bread, three types of rolls, pastry, a sponge cake and more.

Almey produced an entrée, vegetables, soup and desserts.

The Food School at E.C. Drury features a full commercial kitchen and bake shop. Students cater the staff dining room, which is also open to the public.

They also take orders from the community, including wedding cakes.
