Union could strike in fall

The union representing those who work with at-risk and special needs students at the Halton District School Board expects to be in a legal strike position just prior to the start of the next school year.

The Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation (OSSTF), District 20, Halton Professional Student Services Personnel (PSSP) bargaining unit has asked the Ministry of Labour for a No Board Report. The step will put the unit in a position to take legal strike action by August 26.

The action was taken after negotiations with board personnel with the assistance of a provincial conciliator June 16 failed to break the impasse.

PSSP represents more than 40 staff, including psycho-educational consultants, social workers, speech and language pathologists, and child and youth counsellors working with at-risk and special needs students in Halton's public elementary and secondary schools.

"Our members have been very patient, but we have now been working without a contract for nearly two years and see no sign that the Halton board is serious about negotiating a settlement," said Willi Steinke, president of the District 20 PSSP bargaining unit.

Sandra Sahli, executive officer of OSSTF and chair of the negotiating team, said, "The board cannot expect to retain staff and provide necessary continuity in delivering professional support services for Halton students when it isn't willing to address the unique salary and workload issues of those who do this work. Currently, these employees are among the lowest paid in the province for similar job classes."

Dawn Beckett-Morton, the school board's executive officer of human resources and its chief contract negotiator, had little to say except that she's unsure what Sahli means in reference to PSSP members' unique salary and workload issues.

Rock climber falls 30 feet

A Toronto man suffered non-life threatening injuries after falling while rock climbing at Rattlesnake Point Conservation Area Monday.

Police said the 38-year-old man was climbing with two friends at the park located at Appleby Line and Steeles Avenue.

He had made three climbs, and was attempting to do a final one as the lead climber.

At about 7:30 p.m., the man was about 30 feet up the rock face and had set about five anchors when he called out he was falling. The two top anchors gave way and the victim fell to the ground, landing on his right side.

His seven-year-old daughter was watching her father climb when he fell.

Police, the fire department, emergency medical services, Conservation Halton and an air ambulance attended the scene.

The victim was airlifted to Hamilton General Hospital with a broken jaw and right arm, and a suspected broken right leg.
