Release from 'Hawks upsetting: Anderson

Seasoned coach handed his walking papers once again

bench boss of the 2003/04 IceHawks — before George Dupont was brought on board. "It's frustrating." Making the news even tougher to swallow for Anderson is the fact that he and assistant coach Pat

Getting the axe isn't exactly unfamiliar territory for Jay Anderson.

But being let go before even coaching his first game — well that's a new one.

That's essentially what happened to the seasoned Provincial Jr. A League coach this week, as Rick Heinz's takeover of the Milton IceHawks brought a premature end to his tenure as the team's head coach.

Hired back in April by then owner Mario Forgiore after cutting ties with the neighbouring Raiders, 38-year-old Anderson of Georgetown simply didn't fit into the team's new plans — according to Heinz.

Receiving official word on his release Tuesday afternoon from David Brown — who up until recently had been overseeing operations for both the IceHawks and then affiliate Mississauga IceDogs — Anderson didn't try to mask his disappointment.

"This was the second time I was suppose to be Milton's head coach and wasn't," he said, referring to what he called a tentative agreement to take over as Cocklin — now gone as well — had undergone an intense two months of recruiting and had commitments from a number of standout Jr. B players.

Those deals are now null and void.

"We'd done so much work and were confident about maintaining what Milton hockey fans had come to expect — which is a high level of competitiveness," said Anderson, who had half-a-dozen different stints behind the Raiders' bench and was an assistant with Milton in both 1995-96 and 2003. "I think the smart thing to do at this late a date, especially with no players coming back, would have been to keep us around for a year. But it's his (Heinz's) team and his prerogative on how he wants to run it. I'm sure he's got a plan."

The just-released coach seemed doubtful that another offer will present itself before the 2006/07 season begins, and added quite vehemently that he's "not going back to being an assistant."
