More mosquitoes found carrying West Nile in Milton

Risk to humans increasing, says Region

Additional mosquitoes trapped in Milton have tested positive for West Nile virus (WNV), meaning a greater chance of humans becoming infected.

Last week, nine batches trapped by the Halton health department tested positive for the virus. One of these batches was from Milton, six were from Oakville and two were from Georgetown.

The first mosquitoes to test positive in Milton since 2003 were trapped August 2.

The most recent testing means WNV has been detected in all four Halton municipalities. WNV-infected birds have also been found in Burlington and Oakville.

This year so far, no human cases of WNV have been detected in Halton, but the risk is increasing.

"The virus is going to continue to build in the mosquito population until the end of the season," said Halton Medical Officer of Health Dr. Bob Nosal.

"Therefore, the likelihood of mosquitoes passing on the virus to humans is increasing."

The highest risk period for WNV is from now until late September. The risk of serious illness from WNV increases with age. The health department is advising residents, especially older adults and the elderly, to protect themselves against mosquito bites to reduce the risk of becoming infected.

RCMP says it can't comment on case

• from RCMP on page A1
 RCMP spokesperson Michele Paradis said she couldn't comment on any of the allegations since the case is before the court.

"What I can say is the RCMP strives to provide a safe and healthy work environment to all employees — all 22,000-plus employees," she said.

Carty's currently on sick leave as a result of the alleged stressful work environment, said his lawyer, Selwyn Pieters. The RCMP has 20 days to respond to the allegations with a statement of defence.
