Preteen sheds locks for Angel Hair for Kids

Rikki inspired by little cancer sufferer

By Stephanie Thiessen
CANADIAN CHAMPION STAFF

Rikki Proctor, 11, almost chickened out before having 13 inches lopped off her long, blond hair.

Her tresses had always hung well below her shoulders and suddenly, sitting on the hair stylist's chair one day earlier this summer, she wasn't so sure she wanted to part with it.

"I was really nervous," said the grade 7 student of Holy Rosary school. "I had no idea what I'd look like with short hair."

But a little girl's face came to mind, and Rikki knew she had to do it. As her hair fell to the floor, and her new 'do began taking shape, a smile stretched across her face.

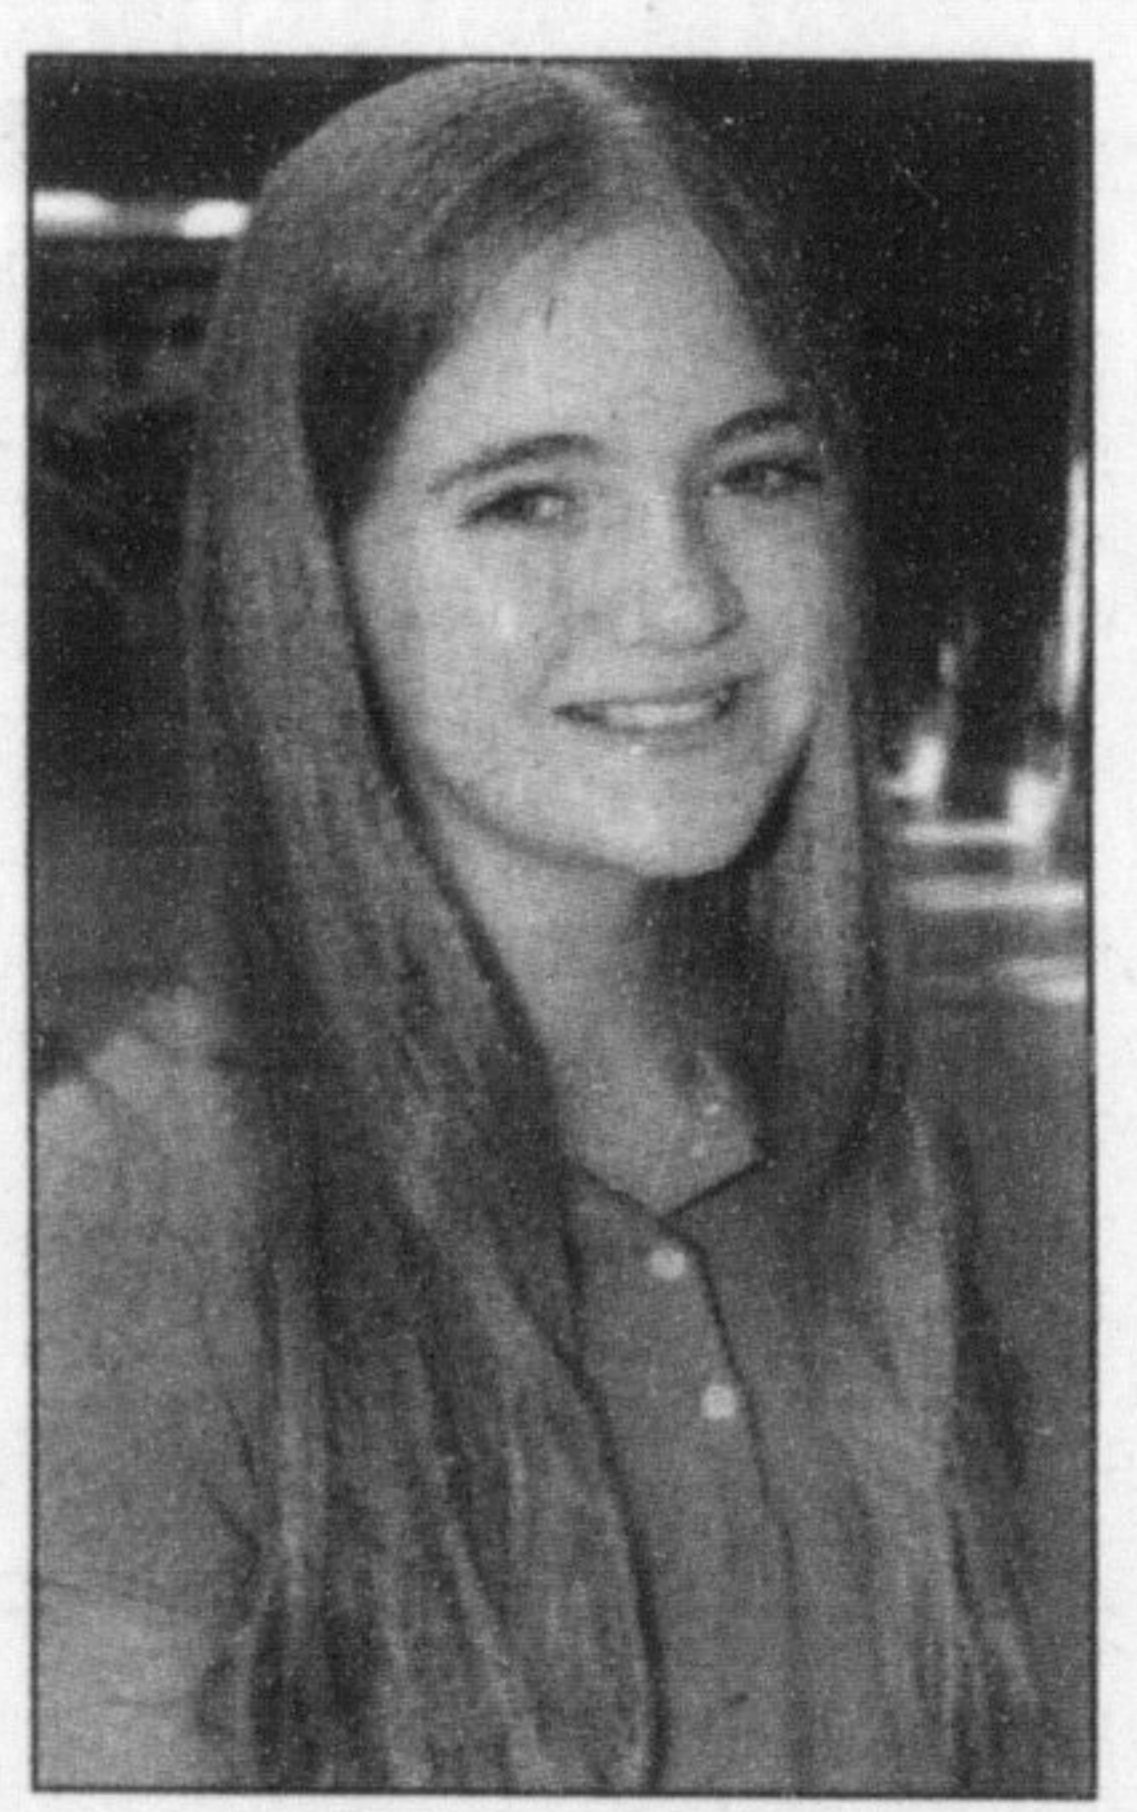

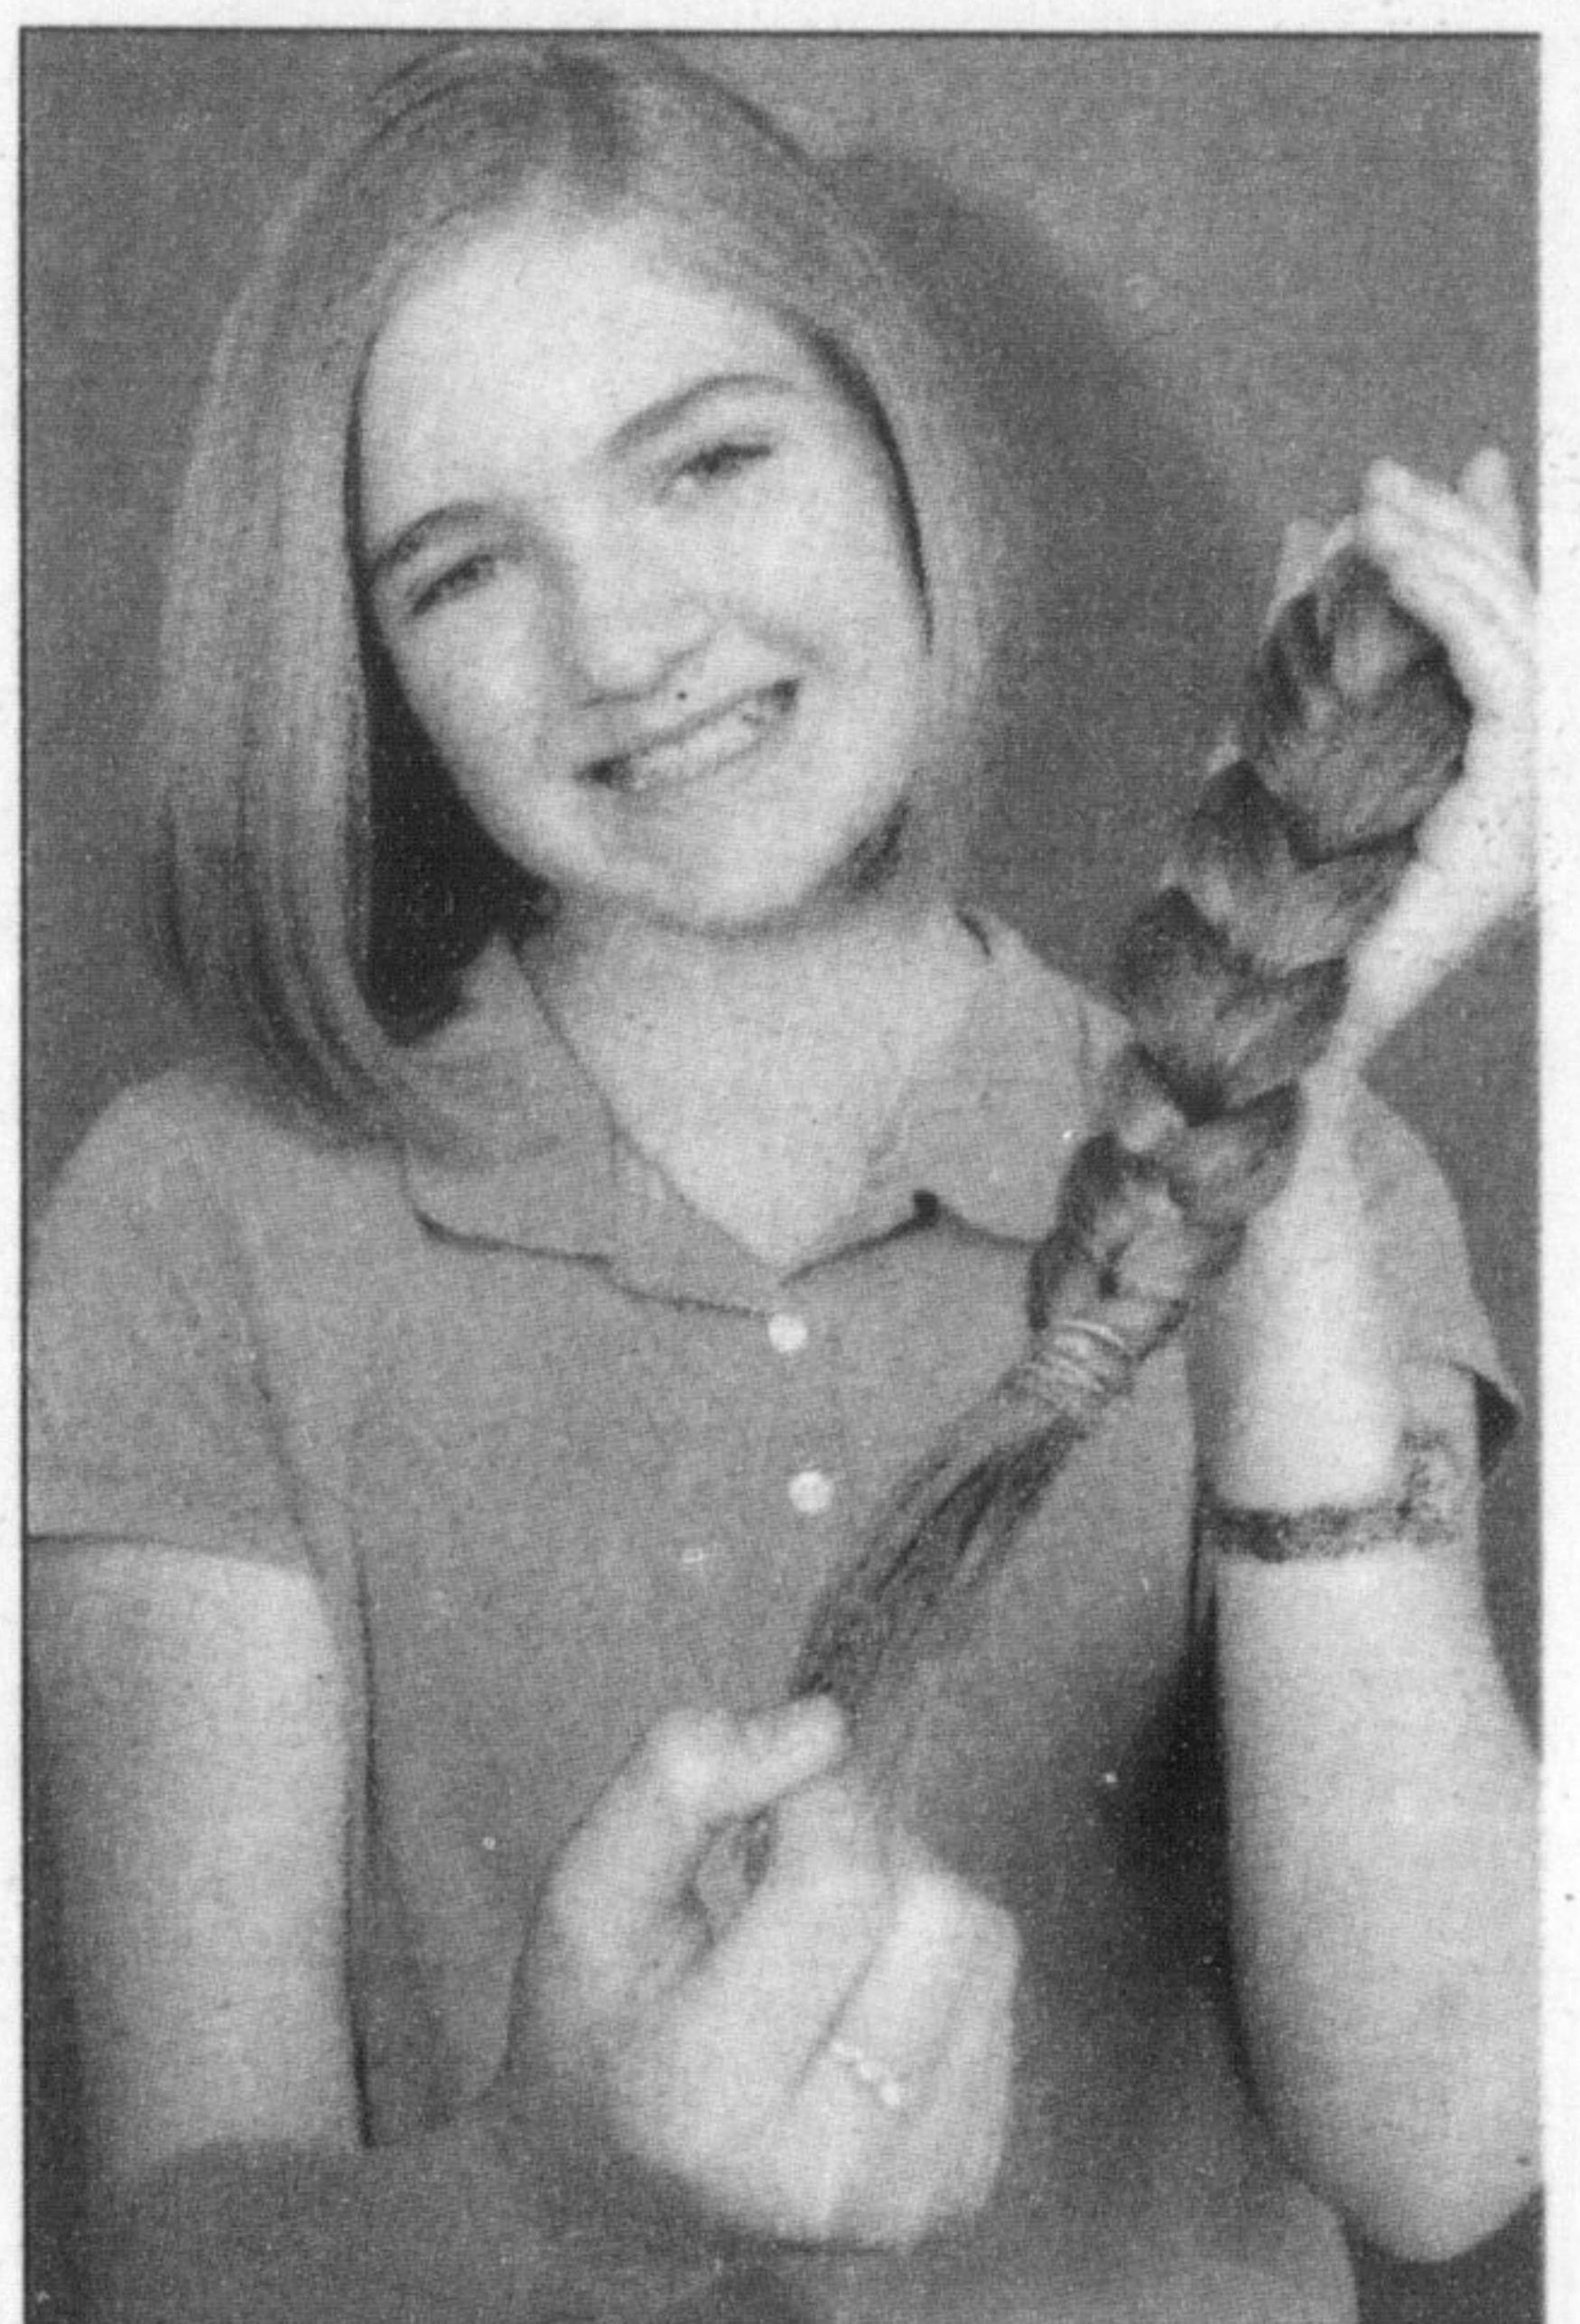

"I loved it!" she said.

In cutting her hair, Rikki was doing much more than satisfying an urge for a new hairstyle.

She was making it possible for a child with cancer — or some other disease resulting in hair loss — to fit in with her friends once again.

Her hair went to Angel Hair for Kids, which provides human hair wigs to children with various illnesses from financially disadvantaged families.
