General Information

- Bone Marrow:
- is the soft organic material that fills the cavities of the long bones
 - Bone Marrow produces:
 - red blood cells that carry oxygen
 - white blood cells that fight infection
 - platelets that help stop bleeding
 - The best treatment for Aplastic Anemia is to replace the diseased marrow with a healthy marrow "match" from a HLA (Human Leukocyte Antigen)

- Types of Transplants
- Allogenic
 - Syngeneic Marrow Grafts
 - Autologous
 - Matched Siblings
 - Matched Unrelated Donors (MUD)

Some Diseases and Conditions Requiring Bone Marrow Transplants

- Aplastic Anemia
- Fanconi's Anemia
- Swachman-Diamond Disease
- Ewing's Sarcoma
- Myodysplasia
- Hurler's Syndrome
- Acute Non-Lymphoblastic (granulocytic) Leukemia
- Acute Lymphoblastic Leukemia (ALL)
- Acute Monocytic Leukemia (AMOL)
- Acute Promyelocytic Leukemia (APL)
- Chronic Myelogenous Leukemia (CML)
- Cancer of the Testis

Donor Information

- If you are between the ages of 17 - 50 and are in good health, you can be a donor.
- Bone marrow type is not determined by your blood groups.
- Your chances of being a match ranges from one in 4,000 to one in 750,000 depending on your ethnic background.
- 6 antigens are needed to make a perfect match.
- Following an information session two vials of blood are drawn - one vial is tested for HLA-typing, the other vial is tested for the last two antigen matches by DR/DNA typing.
- If you are a match, 6% of your bone marrow is collected from the hip under general anesthetic: the bone marrow taken is replenished in a few weeks.

Improving your quality of life.

Hearing loss is the 3rd most prevalent chronic disability among older adults and is superseded only by arthritis and hypertension. There has been great advancements in hearing aid technology and statistics show that 80% of clients are satisfied with their hearing aids when appropriately counseled.

It is critical to identify and treat speech, language and hearing disorders as early as possible as these impact social, emotional and cognitive development.
