Glen Eden revenue down

By Stephanie Thiessen
 CANADIAN CHAMPION STAFF

A delay of almost a month in the opening of Glen Eden Ski and Snowboard Centre has resulted in a revenue decrease of about $750,000 compared to last year.

Mother Nature was to blame for the delay, with temperatures not cold enough to make snow. The centre opened January 13 instead of the planned December 16.

A Glen Eden progress report from Kevin Keith, director of Conservation Lands Services, was received by Conservation Halton's (CH) executive committee at its meeting January 25.

The report states that, as of the beginning of January, revenues were down the aforementioned amount compared to the same time last year because of the late start to the season and the cancellation of the centre's Christmas camps.

"Although we have been able to control our expenses by placing a freeze on all discretionary spending and putting our seasonal staff on-call, our projected $400,000 profit for this season will obviously not be met," the report states.

Another report by Keith that went before the board yesterday states the preliminary projected profit for this season is estimated at just $55,000.

Revenues are expected to be about $1 million short of the budget target, the report states.

Several actions that were taken as a result of the late start to the season are listed in the first report.

They include transferring some full-time staff to different CH departments, moving the snowmaking crew to the hazardous tree removal program, pushing back the start of the eight-week lesson program by one week, offering season pass holders free access to CH's conservation areas and negotiating discounts for season pass holders at Horseshoe Resort in Barrie.

It was also recently decided the tube park will remain closed, as it did last year, due to the slow start to the season, so staff can focus on the ski/snowboard operation.

Enhanced marketing initiatives will aim to increase the number of visitors for the rest of the season.

Glen Eden usually remains open for skiing and snowboarding into March.

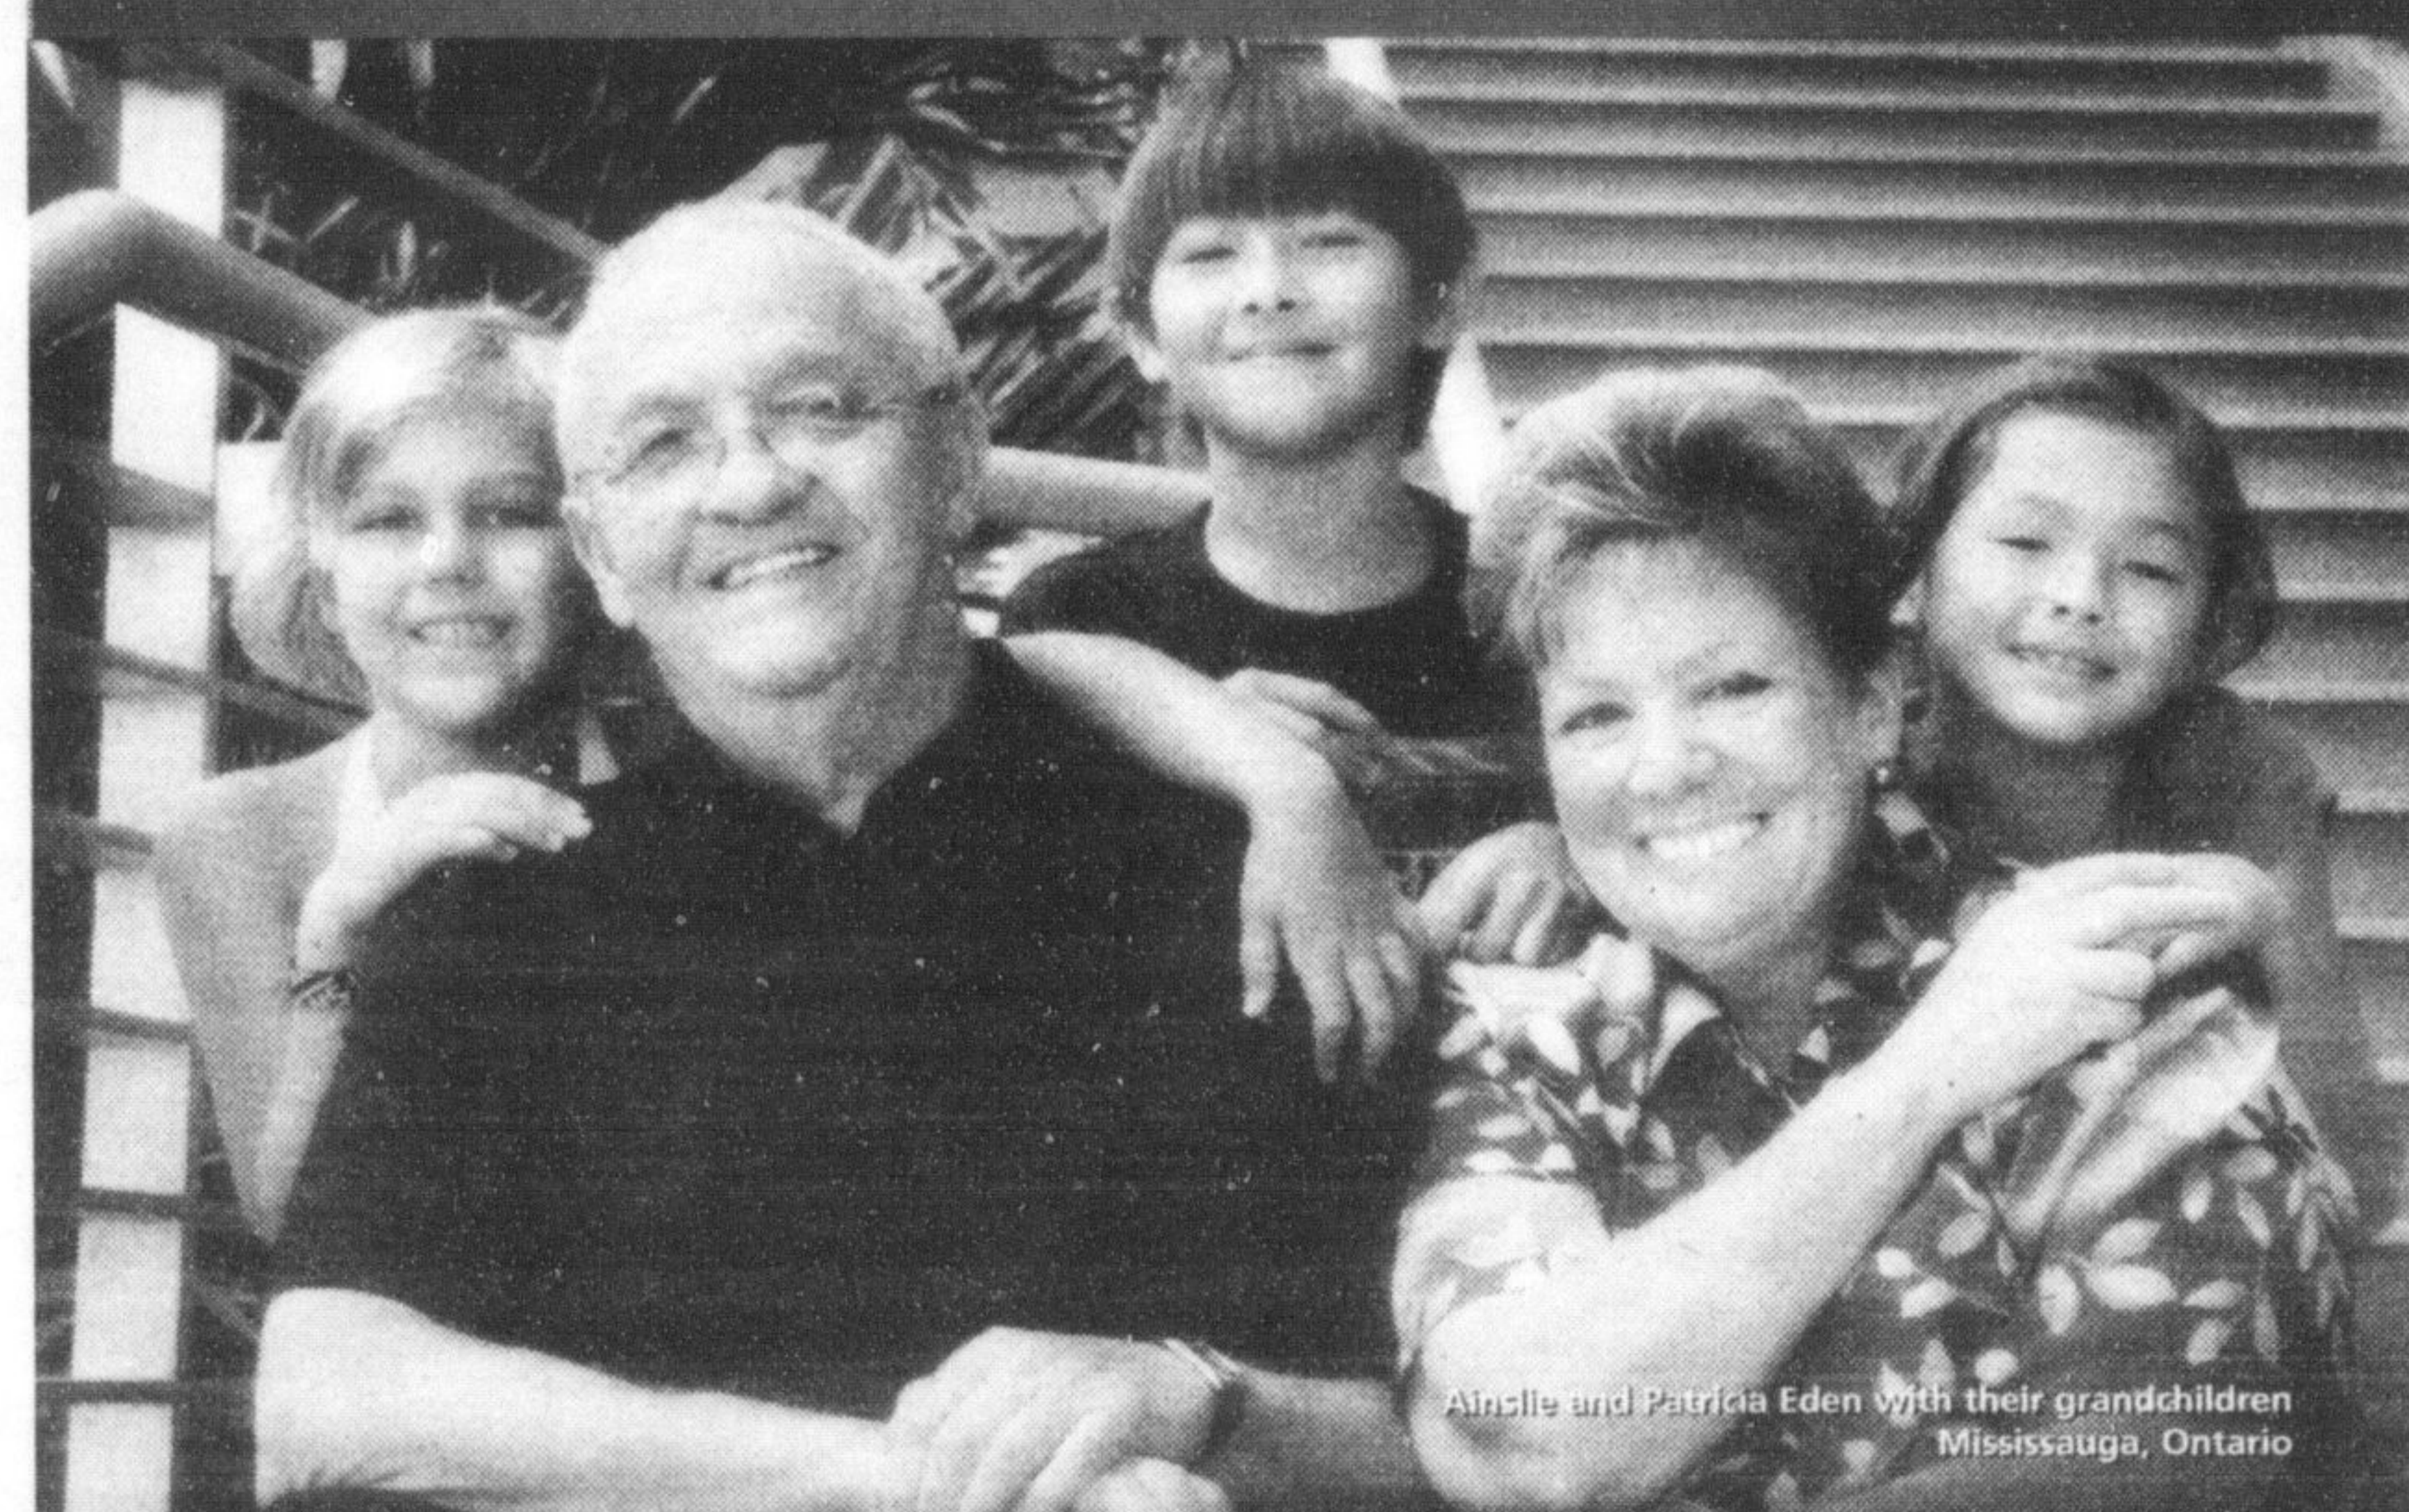

The report admits it's been a very challenging season, but stated staff is far from ready to give up.

"Staff are optimistic and committed that with colder temperatures and wintry weather, the remainder of the season will be successful with strong visitations and guest experience," it reads.
