

Mattamy's phase 3 gets initial green light

The third phase of a large Mattamy Homes subdivision has been given the initial thumbs up by the Town.

At its meeting Monday night, the administration and planning committee supported rezoning a section of land near the southeast corner of Derry and Tremaine roads to make way for 371 more homes — 233 single and semi-detached and 138 townhouses.

While 2,216 homes have been proposed for the overall property — of which 670 have already been approved by council — water and wastewater capacity has only been secured for an additional 371 units at this time through an agreement with the Region.

Wards 2 and 4 Councillor Colin Best expressed concern with development once again getting ahead of roads and put forward a motion calling for the Town to ask the Region and Ministry of Transportation to accelerate the planning and budgeting for the Hwy. 401 interchange planned for Tremaine Road. Committee endorsed the motion.

The ultimate plan for Mattamy's 340-acre property also includes designated areas for residential office and commercial development, land set aside for two elementary schools, a neighbourhood park and four village squares. Plans for the subdivision's third phase will go before town council Monday.

Davis seeks Halton's Conservative nomination

While a date has yet to be set for the Halton Conservatives' nomination meeting, another local resident has thrown his hat in the ring to vie for the federal candidate spot.

Richard Davis

Miltonian Richard Davis recently announced his intentions to seek the position, going up against former nomination seekers D'Arcy Keene and Rick Malboeuf.

The 45-year-old has already set some specific goals he'd like to achieve if ultimately chosen as the candidate, with one of his main focuses being to get sports and recreation funding increased.

"By focusing on sports and recreation I believe we can make a major impact on two other important areas that concern Canadians — health costs and crime," he said. "By reintroducing sports and healthy activities to all children we will start to reduce the startlingly high obesity rate."

He noted that by keeping children busy and active they'll also have less idle time, which he said should have an impact on petty juvenile crime.

On the health-care front, Davis is calling for the government to make changes to the process doctors who immigrate to Canada must go through before they can practise here.

"Once these people arrive in Canada they face an uphill battle in having their professional qualifications recognized by Canadian companies and even the federal and provincial governments," he said. "The government should be proactive in aiding would-be immigrants and Canada itself by being able to assess people's qualifications prior to them entering the country."

He proposed this could be done by investigating foreign educational facilities to certify whether their programs meet or exceed Canadian standards.

Once that is done, Davis said he thinks immigrants should be able to have their professional accreditations certified and then find employment immediately, providing they can use one of the two official languages.

He noted that as an 'army brat', he's also a great supporter of the Canadian military. "If we're going to send our personnel into dangerous situations it's incumbent upon us to provide them with the best tools with which to do their jobs," he said.

Davis is a married father of three who works as an air traffic controller at Pearson International Airport. He's also the president of the Milton Marlin Swim Team.
