GRAHAM PAINE / CANADIAN CHAMPION

MARCHING TO THE BEAT: Elizabeth Kiddle beats a drum while sitting on a bench outside the labyrinth that Audrey Schreiber, left, and Shelu Bhimani walk. The labyrinth is located behind Boston Presbyterian Church at 9185 Third Line/Boston Church Road. The church is holding group walks through the labyrinth Wednesdays throughout July and August starting at 7 p.m. Everyone's invited to take part, or the public can walk the path on their own at any time. The labyrinth was first created last summer. Kiddle, who's been involved every step of the way, said walking the maze is very peaceful, and the country atmosphere of Boston Presbyterian Church only adds to the tranquility. She said there are numerous health benefits associated with "walking meditation," including lowered blood pressure. Labyrinths are an ancient art form comprised of symbols and patterns. Interest has recently resurfaced in them, Kiddle said, and now they're popping up in more and more communities. It's an activity people of all ages can do — everyone from the very young to the elderly seem to enjoy winding through labyrinths, she said.
