Take it from me, it's not easy being green

Enough already. I'm green. As green as I want to be. Even greener.

I want to save the planet as much as the next green person, but let's stop and breathe the semi-fresh air for a while.

The zealots are taking over, just like they did with the anti-smoking campaign. At first they were happy to get smoking out of elevators. Then came the workplace, public places, and then places near public places. Next are apartment buildings and your private residence.

They eventually got everything they originally wanted and more, but it's going so well they don't want to stop.

Starting next year, smoking on Tuesdays between noon and five will be illegal anywhere in the country. If you do smoke, you will be shot.

It's the same way with the greeniacs. Get a victory, keep going. And going and going. Of course they've done a lot of good, it would be silly to argue that point, but I'm getting tired of being pushed and made to feel guilty about every move I make. Guilt is big with the greeniacs.

Replacing every light bulb in the country? Not so sure about that. Naturally the new bulbs cost more — you have to pay extra to save the planet — but the tradeoff is that they last longer. It's like they're riding the momentum and it doesn't seem to matter if what they say is true or not. Even car emissions tests, pushed and prodded by greeniacs, and considered mandatory to save the world, have turned out to be a waste of time and money and there's talk they may be eliminated.

And take that Al Gore movie about global warming. Turns out apparently about half the so-called facts in the movie are not facts. And what about when they introduced lady bags as a natural insecticide — and created a ladybug epidemic.

Don't worry about the mistakes, they can all be overlooked because it's all for the green good in the end. Keep on going, can't stop now.

Now, we're going to get those green boxes to put in food waste. I've had those before. The food ends up rotting and stinking enough to make you gag every time you open the lid. But, okay.

And the lawn. I used to put down weed and feed in the spring and that was it for the year — a nice lawn with no weeds. My sister-in-law says no, no, no, and when I argue, she drops the grandchildren card. Do I want my grandkids to get sick from the toxic materials?

Well, no, I don't, but my kids never got sick from it, or any other kids I ever heard about — and by the way I notice you haven't traded in your car for a horse.

Okay, fine, she's researched it, she's offered alternatives, so I take back the fertilizer I knew would work and get the environmentally-friendly variety, which of course costs more, and as it turns out doesn't get rid of the weeds.

So, now I'm on my hands and knees picking out weeds all the time. It's like the lawn is a Milton showcase for weeds. What I need is some weediacs to help me out.

If not, it could be disaster. I'm allergic to some of these weeds so I get stuffed up and sneeze. I sneeze and it causes somebody else to sneeze. And somebody else. Then somebody with an infectious disease sneezes and passes it on to somebody else, who passes it on to somebody else. Pretty soon there's an epidemic and everybody on the planet dies.

How's that? Green enough for you?
