

Your Invitation To Worship

Superbowl Sunday

Superbowl Sunday is February 3, 2008. Avid sports fans, young and old, will cheer on their favourite players as they battle one another for this coveted championship. With such focus on football this week, let's consider how some of its more technical terms could be applied in a church setting.

A quarterback sneak is when church members attempt to leave quietly, leaving during the altar invitation.

A draw play is what many children do with their bulletin throughout the Worship Service.

Half-time refers to the interval of time between the conclusion of Sunday School and the beginning of the Worship Service.

A benchwarmer is someone who does not contribute to the service in any way. Sadly, this individual does not sing, pray, work, or give and is quite content to simply sit and do nothing.

Having a backfield-in-motion describes what happens when the younger children begin to make restroom or water fountain trips to the back of the sanctuary during the service.

Staying in the pocket is what can happen to someone's money if they fail to realize the importance of giving to support God's work.

The two-minute warning is the point at which members of the congregation realize that the sermon is almost over and begin to gather up their personal belongings.

An instant replay is used when the pastor loses his place in his notes and rereads a certain section.

Sudden death occurs when the preacher goes into overtime and is often evidenced in the attention span of congregation members.

A trap is particularly effective when the individual called on to pray for the special requests failed to pay attention as they were listed.

An end run allows people to get out of church quickly, without having to speak to anyone.

And finally, a blitz best describes the pressing rush for the restaurants that follows the closing prayer.

Hope you enjoyed those parallels! They were meant to make you smile!

Consider visiting a local church this week and take the first step towards reaching your personal potential and brightening the future of those around you! Consult the Religious Directory below for service times and location.
