Trip left major impression on teen

SNOW MUCH FUN: The Crazy Canucks spell out their name with huge ice letters.

But the trip had some lighter moments, including a Canucks-Iqaluit final that was attended by roughly 600 fans — quite remarkable since the community comprises only 6,000 people.

"The place was completely packed, no sitting space left at all," said Jack.

Further endearing themselves to their hosts, the Canucks provided plenty of vocal support for the Iqaluit team during their semifinal showdown with an Ottawa squad — and erupted into celebration once the 4-3 win was solidified.

"It was an awesome sight to see all 14 players hanging over the glass and cheering on the Iqaluit squad," recalled Belgrade.

While the Nunavut players weren't exactly on par with their southern Ontario natives in terms of the overall fundamentals, the Eagles stressed they were quite impressive in one area of the game.

Said Allan, "They can skate like the wind."

In exchange for their hosts' hospitality, the Canucks presented area players with five bags full of hockey equipment, including brand new jerseys.

While no plans are in place for a return to Iqaluit, it's something team organizers are certainly keeping open.

"They'd love to have us back there and I'm pretty sure the boys would want to go," suggested Allan.

With widespread poverty and both employment and recreational opportunities almost non-existent compared to most areas in Canada, teen alcoholism and suicide are commonplace.

"You just don't know what you have until you see a place like that," said a suddenly somber Jack. "These people have nothing compared to us."

Added Allan, "It's amazing how they get by with so little."
