Enjoy your kids right now

Recently, I took a train ride to visit an old friend.

I requested a window seat as I love to watch the landscape during my travels. When I sat down, I realized that although I had a window seat, the large window divider prevented me from seeing ahead. The back of my seat prevented me from seeing behind. The only thing I could see was directly beside me.

At first I fought the idea of sitting in this seat, but as I looked around I realized that the train was sold out and I would have to stay put. So there I was, I couldn't see where I was going and I couldn't see where I had been, I could only see where I was at that moment and that made me somehow uncomfortable.

As the trip progressed, I learned to appreciate seeing where I was at the moment and in the end, it was a great ride.

We tend to do the same thing with our children. We talk incessantly about how happy we will be when they are out of diapers, in school, get their grades up, are able to ride the bus or can drive themselves where they want to go. Sometimes we get nostalgic for the past. Wasn't he cute when he was little? Remember the good ol' days with the pitter patter of little feet? Ah, life was so easy before they were teenagers.

with DANIELLE LALONDE

There's something to be said, however, for enjoying our children right now, as they are, with all the challenges that come with this age. Talking to them, reading/playing with them and spending time with them today, right now, without trying to change anything. They will benefit from this time more than any toy or treat.

It has been said that life is what happens when you are busy making other plans. Let's not let our precious time with our children pass us by.
