

The Impreza is quite feisty

costing in the mid-20s. Previous generations were a bit plasticky, but that's been improved with better materials like double-stitched fabrics, aluminum-look inserts and a pleasing twin-cockpit design.

Other than the above-mentioned four-door sedan, you can order the Impreza in many configurations: five-door base and Sport (starting at $21,895 and $25,595), the 224 hp WRX four-door (starting at $30,995), the 265 hp WRX265 four-door (starting at $33,995), WRX five-door (starting at $31,895), WRX265 five-door (starting at $34,895) and the 305 hp WRX STI (starting at $39,995).

And although the WRX and STI models offer a big jump power and sophistication, even the base model Impreza delivers a comfortable, yet spirited ride with performance and handling that - in my mind - would put it near, or at the top of its segment. Cornering is precise, with a minimum of body roll, thanks to a stiffer platform and low centre of gravity. And there's plenty of road feel. All this while providing a relatively smooth ride over uneven pavement.

The Impreza may have been on the road less travelled for many car buyers, but with Subaru's attention to mainstream styling, feisty performance, loads of desirable content, and its standard symmetrical all wheel drive, it's bound to be rediscovered very soon.

With so much happening in the world today, it's more important than ever to be informed about your own home town.
