Porsche continues to stand the test of time

• from SUBTLE on page B9

Like Louis XIII cognac, the 2009 911 comes with a price and my test Carrera S Cabriolet with six-speed manual started at $120,400. The PDK adds $5,560. With power seats with memory ($2,120), seat ventilation ($1,090), XM radio ($1,030), the cool Bluetooth with mobile phone and universal interface ($950 and $600) and sundries like heated steering wheel and self dimming mirrors. The as tested price including a shipping fee of $2,080 was $134,780.

Now you could buy a Lamborghini or a Ferrari with similar performance, but at double the price. Porsches aren't cheap, but they are robust and reliable to keep and feed - another reason why they have stood the test of time.

With a top speed of 302 km/h and the ability to do 0-100 km/h in about 4.5 seconds, the 911's admitted performance is one thing, but on the byways of Fort Erie and Niagara-on-the-Lake, there was no rush to go anywhere in particular. At a relaxed pace with the electric top down, the changing autumn colours had just started to turn. With golden sunshine streaming into the cabin, little towns like Crystal Beach looked like picture postcards.

As the TV ad says - priceless!

For those few who can afford this car, and all those (like me) who dream about owning one, the great thing is that the Porsche-ness hasn't been diverted by the marketing and sales people who simply want to sell as many as the market will bear.

And that's the beauty of a 911. You can outperform just about any production car on the road, yet you can also amble down to the corner store for a bag of milk.

This car does so many things so well for so long, it makes its own statement whether at speed or at rest.

And it's all summed up in three numbers - 911.
