

Oct. 6 provincial election now officially underway

Five candidates are running in Halton riding

Politicians have been on the campaign trails for months, and, as of this week, the election season has officially begun.

The 40th Ontario general election will take place on Thursday, Oct. 6.

The Halton riding will see incumbent PC MPP Ted Chudleigh go up against the Liberal party's Indira Naidoo-Harris, the NDP's Nik Spohr, the Green Party's Karen Fraser and the Family Coalition's Tony Rodriguez.

Chudleigh has been MPP since 1995. He will focus on such things as reducing the cost of government, bringing in fair labour laws, reducing the regulatory burden on businesses and enacting fair taxation that's competitive with other jurisdictions. For more information, visit www.tedchudleigh.com.

Naidoo-Harris is a former television journalist and will focus on the Liberal platform such as green energy creation, healthcare, education and more. For more information, visit www.voteindira.ca.

Spohr is a recent political science graduate. He will focus on such items as the rising cost of living and tackling the rising gas prices and the HST on home heating costs and job instability. For more information, visit www.nikspohr.ca.

Fraser is a disability support program case-worker. To contact her, email karenfraser@gpo.ca or visit www.gpo.ca.

Rodriguez is campaigning in his third election in the past 12 months and says supporting families is the top priority for his party. To contact him, email tf_rodriguez@yahoo.com.
