

Don't let your dog attack mail carrier: Canada Post

As the nice weather takes hold in Halton, Canada Post is reminding residents and children who may be home during summer daytimes to ensure their pet remains far from the mailbox to help reduce the number of dog bites and attacks mail carriers receive each year.

In the first five months of this year, there have been eight "dog-related incidents" in Halton resulting in 18 workdays lost due to injury. Last year, there were 15 incidents leading to 12 days off from work.

"Our insurance company may go to the insurance company of the property owner to seek compensation for lost wages - that has happened," said Canada Post spokesperson Tom Creech. "It's a major deal for our employees. For an employee who has had a bite, it takes a lot of intestinal fortitude to go back (to delivering the mail)."

If carriers determine there's a hazard at a particular residence due to animals, they may cease delivery until the situation is redressed, said Canada Post.
