

How To Snatch A Cookie.

The kitchen has always been the centre of daily activity in the home. In days gone by, kids would wake up to the smells of bread baking in the oven and bacon sizzling in the pan. Lunch was always on the table when you arrived home from school and you could taste the roast chicken for supper, long before everyone sat down to dinner. You could also taste the brussel sprouts but that's another story.

Now, there are many theories about how to snatch a cookie before dinner but one sure way is to create a diversion. Have your brother or sister enter the front door and shout that they need help. Then you sneak in the back door, raid the cookie jar. (one cookie each, no sense in being greedy) and slip out the back to a favourite hiding spot in the backyard.

At Mattamy, we believe that kitchens are perfect places for family gatherings, which is why we include features such as breakfast bars where you can have your very own 'fast food restaurant' and eat-in areas where you can casually enjoy sit-down meals. We also provide room for help in the kitchen because when everyone gets involved, the food seems to taste a lot better. Some of our kitchens have pantries and bench seating. And the work triangle is efficiently designed.

Oh, and after dinner don't forget to ask for a cookie because you haven't had one for "two whole weeks".
