New electronic devices can help alleviate interruptions

• from MILTON on page A1

Kearns added she was upset the utility told her it couldn't take responsibility if the outages affected her TV or other equipment and that a representative suggested she purchase some surge protection.

"Now does this make sense?" argued Kearns. "I pay for my hydro and have never missed a payment nor been late paying and this is the best they can come up with. This does not seem right to me."

Many new electronic devices come equipped with built-in protection from momentary power outages, noted Lasowski, but some older equipment doesn't.

People can buy uninterruptible power supplies (UPS), which have built in batteries to power electronic devices during outages.

Within the last month, there have been seven momentary interruptions to the most affected of Milton Hydro's 11 feeders, one coming from the Halton Transformer Station at Fourth Line and Main Street, said Lasowski.

That feeder serves approximately 5,000 people at different times, he said.

Customers do not always receive service from the same feeders, added Lasowski. Utilities must shift customers to different or new feeders occasionally in order to balance loads, something that has happened in Milton due to the growth of the town, he explained.

Milton Hydro's other feeders come from the Palermo Transformer Station on Regional Road 25 just north of Burnhamthorpe Road.
