Funny People amusing and touching

Freelance writers Murray Townsend and Jennifer Smith, who have very different tastes in film, review a movie currently playing. This time it was Murray's turn to 'Pick a Flick' and he chose Funny People.

Plot: When famous comedian George Simmons (Adam Sandler) learns he has a terminal disease, his desire to form a genuine friendship causes him to take a green performer (Seth Rogen) under his wing.

What Murray thinks

I'm not a fan of long movies, and Funny People is long. It looks to me as if they tried to fit every possible message in.

Funny People is amusing, but there aren't a lot of laugh-out-loud moments. A lot of the humour is centred around the groin area, which is old and tired. But there are some funny parts, especially with some of the cameos, including Eminem and Ray Romano.

The surrounding cast is good, much like you'd expect in a Judd Apatow movie, and Adam Sandler and Seth Rogen are convincing and believable.

It's got a good story too, just that it would have been better if they took a time-out in the middle for nap time.

If Jennifer had picked this movie I'd have given it two-and-a-half stars, but since I picked it I'll give it three.

What Jennifer thinks

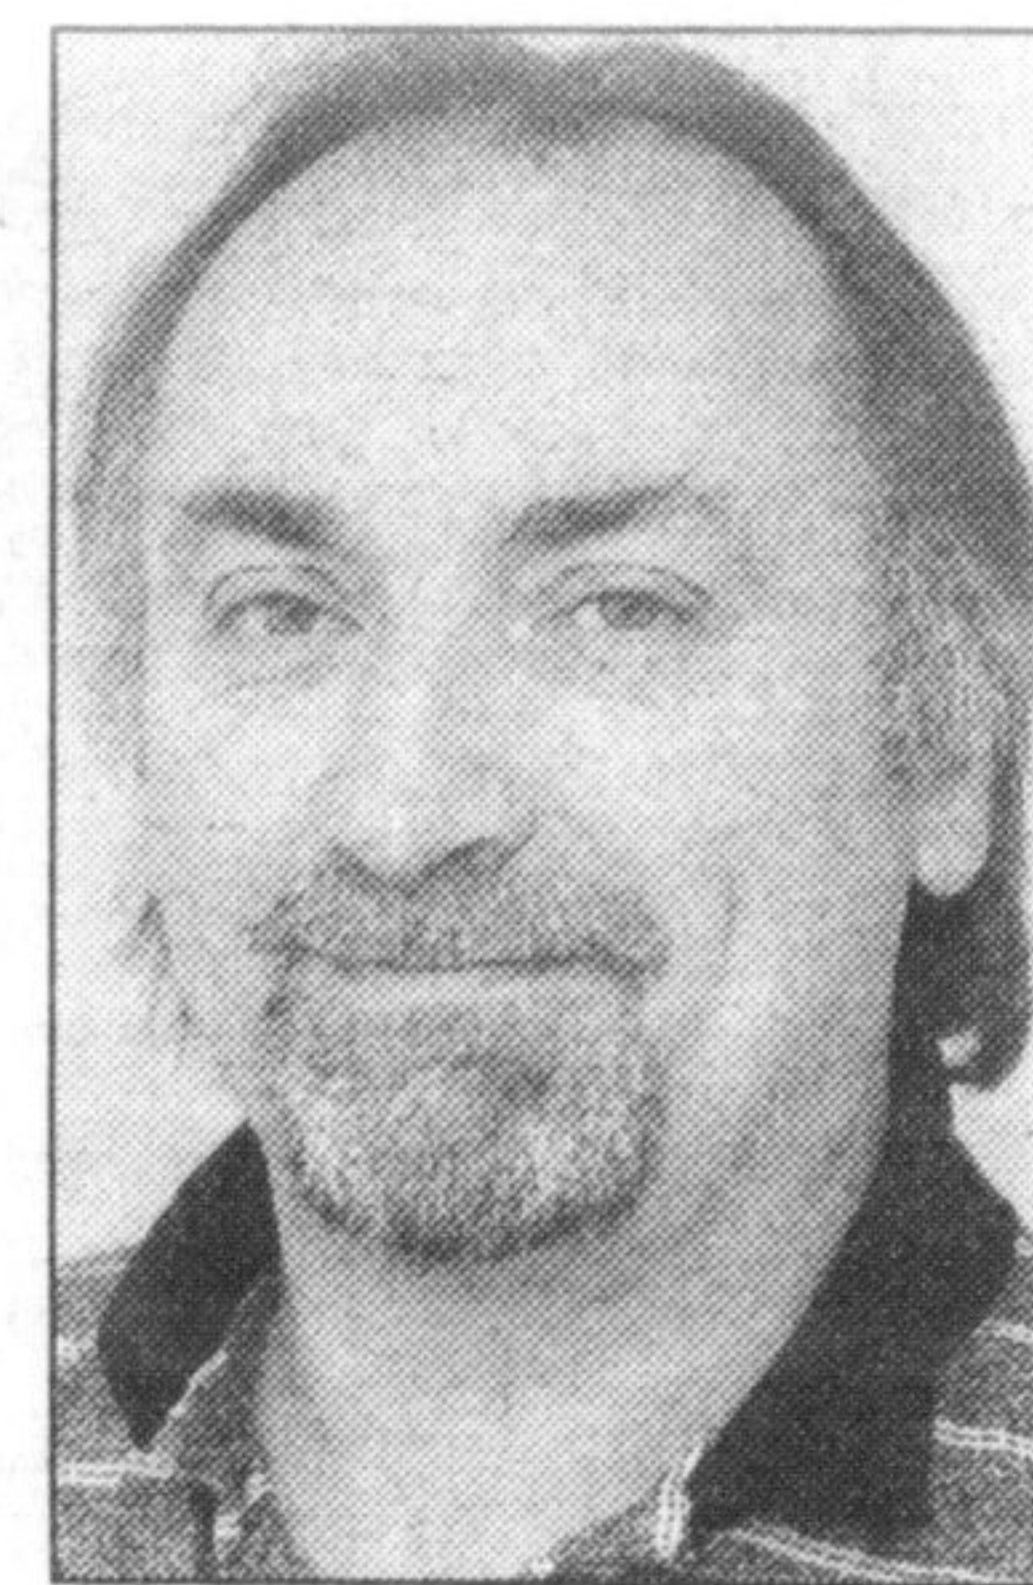

When I heard that Judd Apatow was going to be making a movie with Adam Sandler and Seth Rogen, I couldn't decide if this was the best idea I'd ever heard or the worst. It turned out to be a pretty good idea, but the combination didn't result in the kind of movie I think most people might be expecting.

Funny People manages to deal with issues like morality, happiness and the meaning of life in a way that is... well, funny. We are talking about a bunch of comedians after all.

But it's also an introspective film that asks us to think about our own life choices and whether they have really led us where we hoped they would.

If it sounds a bit heavy, it's not. It's funny and touching, not at all your typical Adam Sandler or Seth Rogen movie.

I'll give it three-and-a-half stars for exceeding the sum of its parts.
