All-new C-car unveiled by Ford at Geneva

Ford's all-new C-car makes its European debut at next week's Geneva show, alongside final versions of C-MAX and Grand C-MAX which go on sale this year.

There are also further product enhancements for the Ford Kuga and Mondeo and more options revealed for the new S-MAX and Galaxy.

ABOVE: The star of Ford of Europe's stand at next week's Geneva Motor Show is expected to be the C-MAX and Grand C-MAX.

The all-new Ford C-MAX family provides two of the star attractions presented by Ford Motor Company at the 2010 Geneva International Motor Show.

The C-MAX family brings new levels of style and desirability to the compact Multi-Activity Vehicle (MAV) market.

Ford's C-segment MAV customers now have the choice of a new five-seat C-MAX or a distinctive new seven-seat Grand C-MAX, which features twin sliding doors and innovative seat design to provide outstanding space and flexibility.

At Geneva, the interior of the five-seat C-MAX is revealed for the first time.

It features a coupe-like, sweeping roofline which falls off to the rear, but without compromising the comfort and practicality of the vehicle.

The seven-seat model features a higher roofline and thinner pillars which emphasize the generous room and visibility on offer within the cabin.

The all-new C-MAX cockpit will represent the next generation of Ford's human machine interface (HMI) system.

The key elements of this technology are two five-way toggle switches on the steering wheel, which control two main vehicle displays: one in the instrument cluster and the second mounted in a high position in the centre console.
