Krane's Dragons' Den deal falls through

But local entrepreneur says all wasn't lost

Local entrepreneur James Krane has a new claim to fame after recently securing the biggest deal in Dragons' Den history.

But the victory is bittersweet for the Miltonian as the deal ultimately didn't make it through the due diligence process.

During last week's pre-taped episode, Krane and business partner/former Miltonian Ron Whittick landed a $5-million deal offered by Brett Wilson and Jim Treiving for their Insect Defend Patch — an all-natural vitamin B1 patch that acts as a mosquito bite deterrent.

Though thrilled about the deal — which Krane feels “shows a lot of confidence in the product” — he said he's also disappointed that it didn't happen in the end.

“My business partners in the States just couldn't come to an agreement on the terms,” he said.

He said he was authorized to offer the dragons 75 per cent of the company for $5 million, but the deal on the table was for $500,000 in cash, with the balance of the $5 million to be paid as a five per cent royalty over 30 years.

One of Krane's partners liked the deal, but the other didn't, he said.

Despite the transaction not going ahead, Krane said having the chance to appear on the Dragons' Den was still an amazing experience.

“It's every entrepreneur's fantasy,” he said. “The publicity we received from the show has been wonderful. It's helped us get the product out in front of the world.”

The Insect Defend Patch is currently sold at Home Hardware, and Krane said it will soon be on the shelves at other stores including Wal-Mart, Zellers, Loblaws, Metro and more.

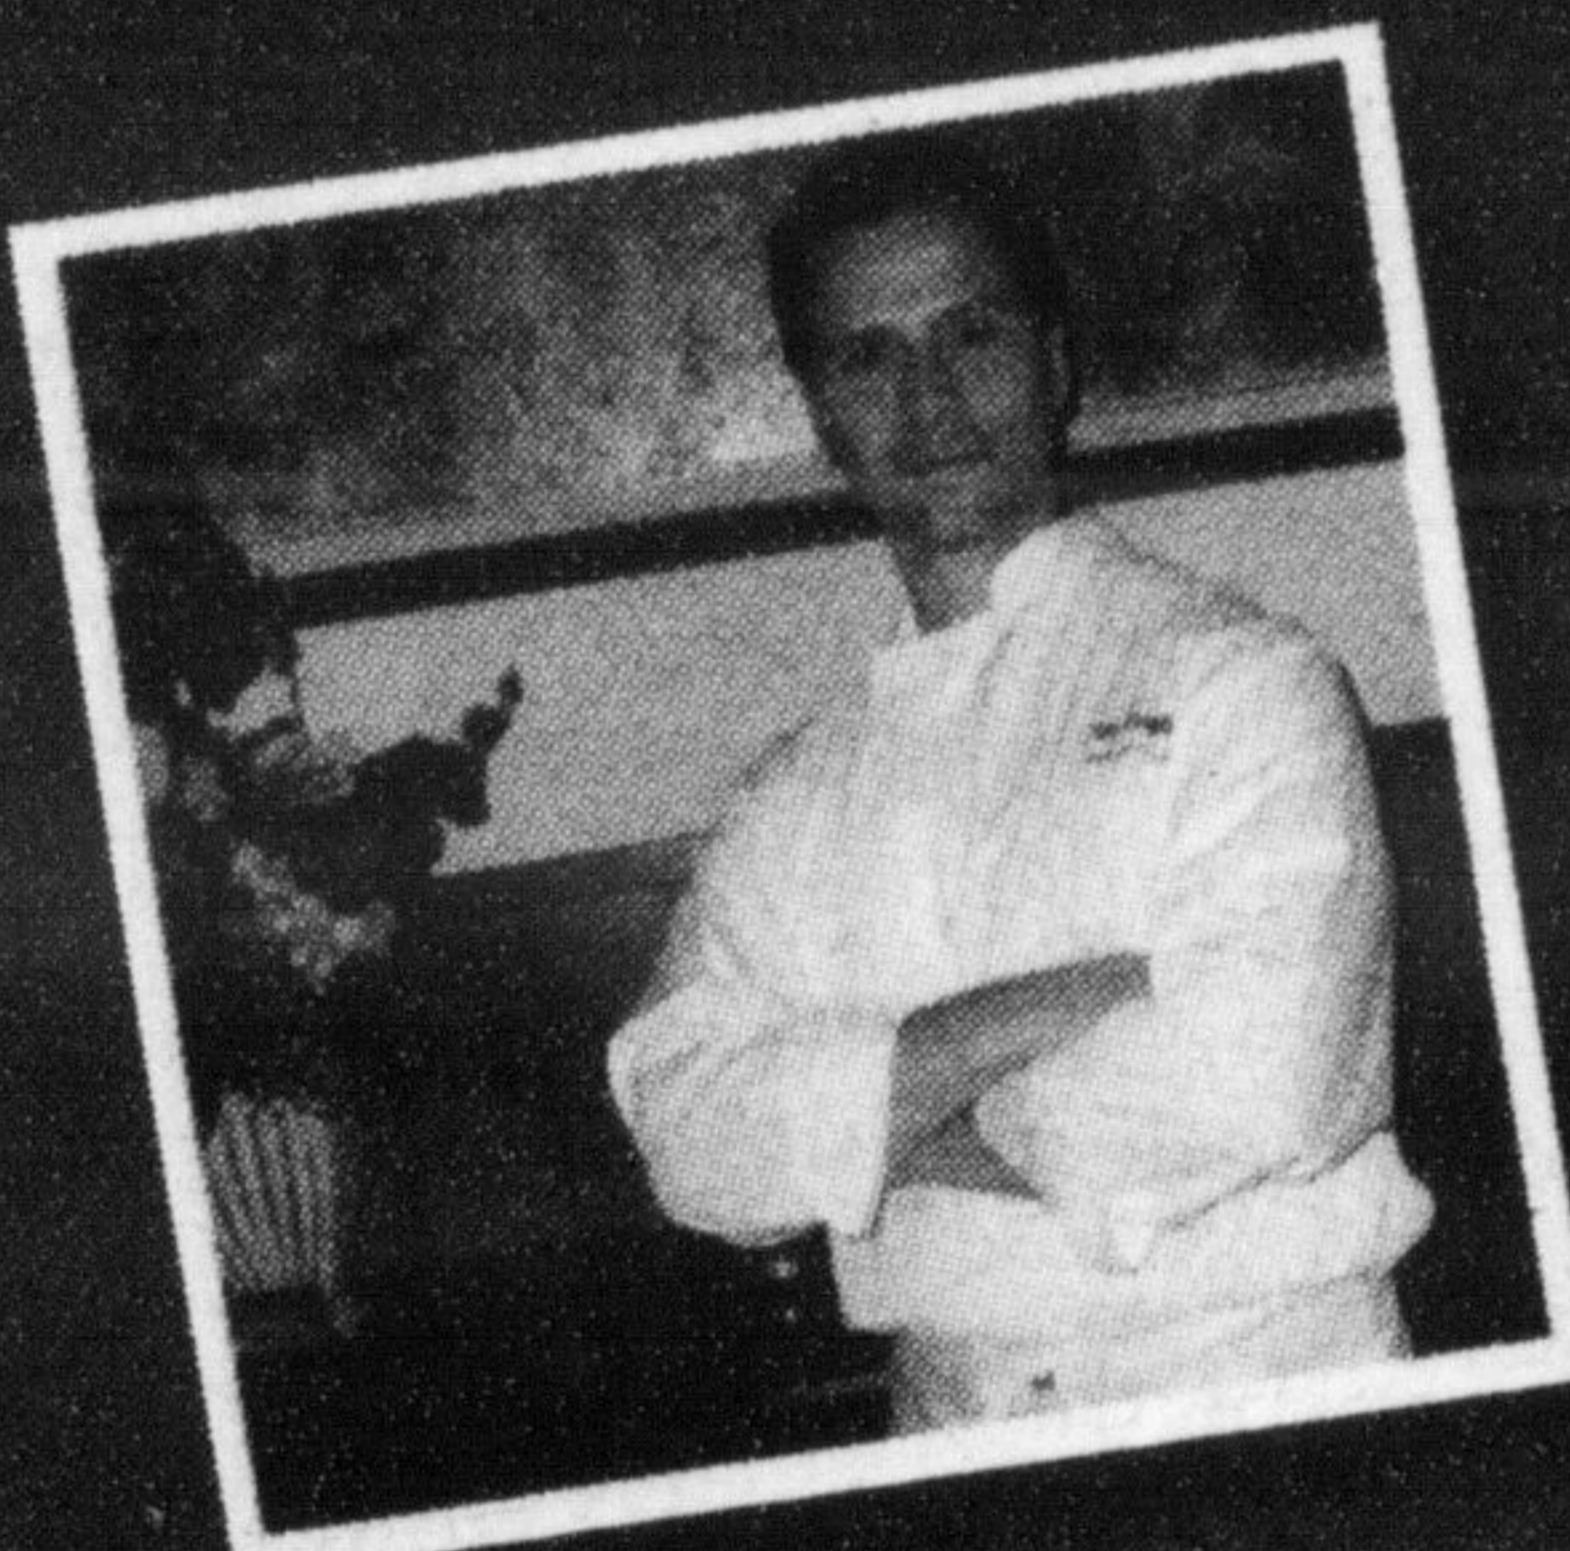

Collectively it's sold in 14 countries, and is in development in 23 other countries, he said.

Krane's company, Safety in Motion, represents the patch in Canada, making the company the Canadian distributor.

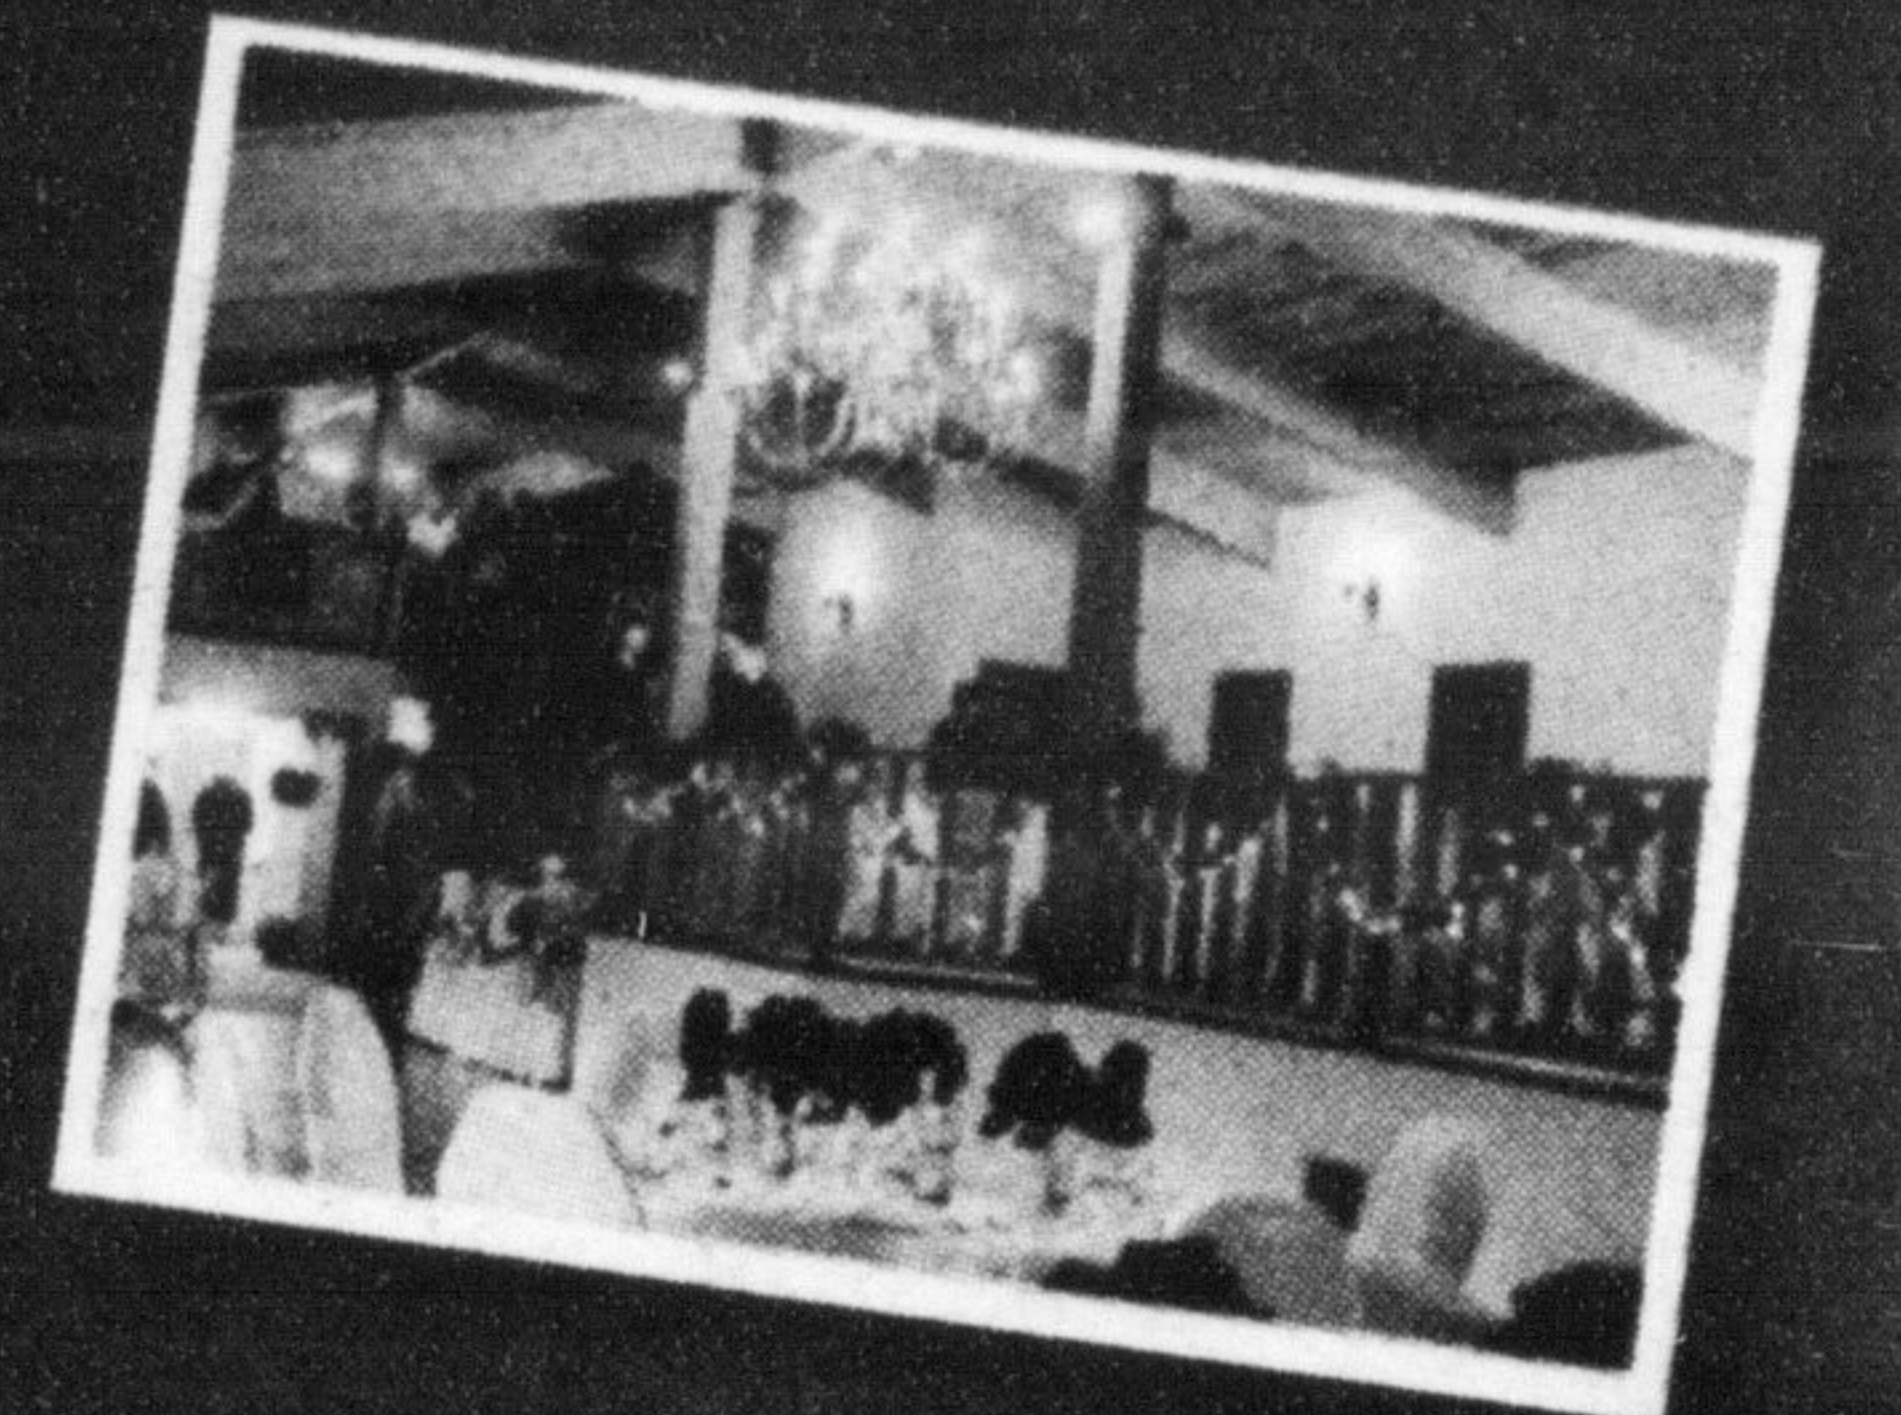

The inventor lives in the U.S. and allowed Krane to represent the entire company and offer the worldwide patents, copyrights and trademarks to the Dragons.
