Men or Women? Who's the better driver?

Metroland Newspapers
Carguide Magazine

Recent research at insurance.com, a U.S. online auto insurance site, has answered the age old question of who is the better driver, men or women. "Women are the better drivers," said Rob Klapper, insurance.com CEO. "To solve the mystery, we took a look at more than seven million drivers to determine which gender reported one or more violations when requesting comparison quotes.

Turns out men report more, almost across the board, regardless of age or education level."

Percentage differences were very close, suggesting there's more equality among drivers than popular belief might suggest. Totaled, 31 per cent of female drivers reported one or more violations, compared with 33 percent of males.

Things change, though, when we're talking about married and unmarried people.

Married females report one or more violations more often than married males (32 per cent to 28 per cent), while single males report more violations than single females (36 per cent to 31 per cent).

When it comes to violation types, males collected more DWIs (drive while intoxicated), while females were more often ticketed for speeding - until you get to higher over-the-limit speeds, where males score higher.

Which is fortunate, since males are more likely to buckle their seatbelts than their female counterparts.

"Bottom line, safe drivers are safe drivers," said Klapper. "And every driver will want to keep in mind that an accident could raise your insurance rate.

"The chance of a rate increase is more likely based on factors such as accident severity, if you're at fault, the value of your insurance claim, type of violation, and if the accident appears on your motor vehicle or comprehensive loss underwriting exchange report."
