BARRY GRAY / METROLAND WEST MEDIA GROUP

COMING HOME: They served in the Second World War and Korea, in peacekeeping missions and in Afghanistan. They offered up the ultimate sacrifice, putting their lives on the line for a better world. But after hanging up their combat boots, have these men and women received the care and support they need and deserve? Metroland Media Group's special report, Coming Home, provides an overview of the struggles faced by veterans returning home, including the frustrations of government red tape and bureaucracy. Physical and psychological wounds can make the transition from soldier to civilian difficult. The scenario doesn't change over the generations — soldiers trained for conflict don't always fit easily back into day-to-day life. See Coming Home on page A16.
