Need on rise

an outpouring of donations in food, toys and cash the days leading up to Christmas.

By last Thursday, a day before the kettle campaign ended, the organization had met its target.

"We could hardly keep up with writing acknowledgments to get tax receipts out. It was a non-stop stream of people," said Hunt.

She said in the final days of fundraising three corporations came through with $9,000 in donations.

Hunt said Sally Ann staff was thrilled after learning more than $200,000 had been raised, but the Khi Community pastors Steve and Leslie Wiseman, who oversee the Salvation Army, brought the staff "down to earth," reminding them the number of clients is increasing.

The Salvation Army was expecting about 240 families to register with the food bank over the one-month registration period. But 280 families signed up for the service, a 32 per cent hike from last year.

"Most businesses are happy to have their business grow, but we're not that happy about it," said Hunt.

While the organization is elated to have had such a successful Christmas campaign, Hunt said the need for the food bank is year-round.

"In January, families will start to pick up their monthly orders and the food will start to go out much quicker than it came in."

But for now, Hunt is still ecstatic over the sheer volume of donations.

"This year was exceptional. We had so many people coming directly to our office to drop of donations. It was 'thank-yous' all day long — pure joy."

This year Sally Ann began a program for parents to pick out a birthday present for their kids. With the large amount of toy donations that came from Miltonians, Hunt said the organization is able to continue the program next year.
