Un-hooked sewer user survey set

Oakville councillor Fred Oliver wants an investigation of how many people are being exempted from the user-pay, water-sewer rates. The system was implemented Jan. 1, 1980 and one of the provisos was that anyone on a sewer line must hook up. Councillor Oliver said he believes there could be as many as 600 homes where this has not been done and estimates it means a loss of up to $70,000 annually to Halton Region. His demand was supported by a letter from former Oakville municipal councillor Arch Donaghey. The question has been sent to the Water Sewer Rate Committee for further discussion.

Health workshop makes suggestion

Halton will ask the province to make health education a mandatory subject in the secondary school curriculum. That was one of the recommendations coming out of the June 23 health and social services workshop which was sponsored by the region. It has also asked physicians to support Halton in seeking to have the province make chronic home care a top priority for funding in this area. The workshop also will ask the Medical Officer of Health, Dr. Peter Cole, to prepare policies for the enforcement of health standards in the region as well as policies for enforcement of provincial regulations.

Council backs staff in court

Halton Region will go to Provincial Court to back up one of its public works inspectors, Peter Levely. During the course of an inspection, Mr. Levely was allegedly assaulted. Region Council has agreed to "provide any and all necessary assistance to Mr. Levely including attendance at Provincial Court to assist in the prosecution." The region has also decided to investigate what has happened in the past with similar problems involving assaults.

People

University of Toronto's Erindale Campus had 566 graduates this year. Among them were Allan Pyle and Lynne-Marie Tree who were granted a three-year Bachelor of Arts degree, and Alison Brown and Anthony Ceelen who received four-year Bachelor of Arts degrees.
