It was Kate's turn and Kate looked and felt confused. "I don't know that can do anything," she said. "Of course I can cook a little and I can car or sing or Taura or do anything like that."

"Never mind, Kate," said Leonora, with a little patronage. "If we did go to Australia, we wouldn't let you

Meantime the rain Lad turned from a steady drizzle to a devastating downpour. Leonora seemed uneasy and started at the slightest sound. Finally the telephone rang and after five minpeck in the hall Leonora came back with flushed face and bewildered ex-

"I'll have to tell you the truth," she said. "We'd had trouble in the kitchen and when the girls heard we were having this party they walked out. Left this morning. Mother telephoned at once to Benton where we get our maids and engaged two, and after them. And now she has telephoned to say that she corldr't get the girls and get back nere herself. The bridge between here and Benton has been undermined by the rain-and so here

The rain had increased to such an alarming extent that there would be no hope of the arrival of the outside guests for the dance that night, still there were eight people in the house and dinner had to be prepared and Leonora was frentic. It was not until Kate donned a smock and went to work that there was any real promise of any sort of Ginner. Reger somewhere found an apron which he tied about his r'alwart person and then, shooing every one else out of the kitchen, said that dinner would be ready at seven and that he and Kate could work better alone.

Having nothing else to do the others dressed for dinner-which turned out to be most toothsome and well served. Even Leonora, forgetting that there are dishes to wash after every dinner. donned the light pink frock she had made especially for the occasion. So after dinner no one needed much urging to consent to leave the work to Kate and Roger.

The last dish and pan had been wached and Kate was scrubbin, up the sink while Roger was laboriously drying the last saucepan.

Months went by. Molly seemed sad. One night she kissed me and did me up carefully. Next morning I was sent back to Bob in New York. The evening I arrived I heard gay laughter and the sounds of a riotous party from my tight confinement in Bob's waistcoat pocket. Bob seemed to be having a wonderful time. There was a girl with him in the taxi going home. Bob drew me from his pocket. I could see his other arm holding her closely to him. She held out her Inger and he placed me on it tenderly. All she said was:

Somehow, I could not imagine Molly Bender receiving me as casually as that, Dolly Vance was a very different cirl from Molly, as different as Siouz City is from New York.
