Copernicus A few Greeks had believed that the earth revolved on its axis and that it and the planets revolved about the sun, but the theory that the earth was fixed as the center of the universe was generally accepted till the Sixteenth ntury. By bringing forward conincing arguments for the views that the sun was the center of the solar system, Copernicus revolutionized as tronomy and gave a great impetus to astronomical study. Furthermore, by seming to displace the home of mankind from the central place in the universe he opened the way for doubts as to whether God had created the entire universe for the benefit of man.
