

Learning all the rules

There was no traffic to interfere with bicycle safety lessons when Martin Street School students rode the streets of the Halton Police Children's Safety Village last Wednesday morning.

The village at Halton Region headquarters on Bronte Road in Oakville, was officially opened last May and includes scaled down replica buildings from each regional municipality in Halton.

At right, students get some in-class lessons at the village and at bottom left, cyclist encounter railway crossings and stop signs.

Below, Constable Susan Delaney has to duck to get through the door of the miniature police station. Behind her is Constable Bill Phipps. About 5,000 school students will visit the village each year.

Jessica Doering is in the slammer. This jail door came from the former courthouse and jail complex in Milton which now houses town hall.
